Kilroy's friends call him ambitious, 'typical kid'

AUSTIN (AP) — Mark Kilroy's friends at the University of Texas describe the pre-med junior as a "typical kid" whose ambition to go to medical school drove him to succeed.

"School came first to him and he knew how to draw that line," Frank J. Padula, Kilroy's neighbor and a senior history major at UT-Austin, said. "He was just an average, typical incoming kid. He was nervous, he wanted to meet some girls, but he knew he had school work to do."

Paul Dugas, a neighbor and friend of Kilroy, said classwork was very important to the 21-year-old student, whose mutilated body was found with 11 others west of Matamoros, Mexico, on Tuesday.

"He used to come over for dinner and he would be completely exhausted, and it wasn't from physical activity; it would be from studying to his capacity," Dugas said.

Tammy Shead, who attended Santa Fe High School with Kilroy, said he was always trying to be the best. "He was very intelligent, a super-smart guy," Shead, a UT psychology junior, said. "In high school I remember him winning all kinds of math and science awards. I know he was confident about school. There was no doubt in my mind he would get into medical school."

Shead said she was in shock when she heard Kilroy's body had been found, and she found it hard to comprehend that he may have been sacrificed in a satanic cult ritual.

"I don't remember hearing about satanism in high school," Shead said. "You don't expect one of your good friends to be an innocent victim of it."

University president William Cunningham said the school shared the grief of Kilroy's family and friends.

"This is a tragedy for the Kilroy family and the university," Cunningham said. "Mark was an excellent student who had a great deal to offer our state and nation. The entire university community joins Mark's family in their sorrow."

Ronald Brown, vice president for student affairs, said the university will offer counseling to Kilroy's family and friends.

"Our sympathy goes to the family," Brown said.

Officials: Murdered millionaire more than merely monogamous

DALLAS (AP) — As a millionaire wholesaler and retailer, Harold E. "Jack" McCollum had a yen for travel but it wasn't always to manage his far-flung enterprises, according to authorities who claim he headed households in different cities.

More than two years after McCollum was slain on the banks of the Navasota River in East Texas, investigators are no closer to solving the crime. But they say the businessman had been married to at least four women at the same time.

Before his 1986 death, McCollum was leading a double life with marriages to Angeline McCollum of Dallas and Marguerite McCollum of Waco, and neither family knew about the other for 29 years, said Leon County Sheriff Royce Wilson.

"You would think, over those years, that there would be some medical problems — maybe the flu or a heart attack — that would cause somebody to suspect something, but there was none," Wilson said. "He just was marrying and getting divorces."

Investigators found evidence that McCollum had been married at least 10 times over a half-century, the sheriff said.

"We finally stopped counting then," said Wilson.

He said the 68-year-old businessman apparently juggled the different marriages by telling his families his enterprises forced him to travel constantly.

Robert McCollum, the businessman's brother and former partner who now runs his own Waco tire company, said he did not want to re-

Judge orders arrest of probation violator

DALLAS (AP) — A 27-year-old Dallas man who confessed a probation violation to what he believed was a sympathetic state judge was shocked when the judge ordered him arrested.

Thomas G. Jones was sentenced last month to 10 years probation after pleading guilty to robbery and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle. At the time, state District Judge Larry Baraka told Jones to come to him if he needed help. So when Jones had trouble continuing a court-ordered drug treatment program, he showed up in Baraka's courtroom.

"He thought I would just talk sweet to him," Baraka told the Dallas Times Herald. "When I put him in custody, he got scared and broke and ran."

Bailiffs chased Jones down the hall from the fifth floor courtroom and cornered him in another courtroom.

Jones had told the court's probation officer the drug treatment sessions the judge ordered were too tough, so he stopped attend-

"It came to a dead end," he said. "We worked on a little lead about three weeks ago. It's turned out to be nothing so far."

Wilson said Jack McCollum's slaying was unrelated to the June 1988 slayings of four people in Houston and Irving, including former members of a polygamist cult.

"When the officer took Jones before the judge, who was busy with an unrelated jury trial, Baraka told bailiffs to find Jones a seat. But when bailiffs asked where, Baraka replied: "It doesn't matter. He's in your custody now."

Hearing that, Jones bolted from the courtroom with bailiff Nolan Davidson in hot pursuit. Davidson cornered and handcuffed Jones, eventually returning the sheepish-looking prisoner to Baraka's courtroom.

"I told him he was acting like a real weakling and it was time for him to be a man," said Baraka, who told Jones he should have known he could be arrested when he came in confessing a probation violation.

"I know, sir," Jones told Baraka. "I just lost my head."

But Baraka gave in — somewhat. Rather than sending Jones to prison, he allowed him to continue on probation provided Jones attends a different drug-treatment program.
