House buzzes over new bill to study bees

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas House tentatively approved a bill Monday that would allocate $100,000 on an emergency basis for research on the Africanized, or killer, bee.

The funding is for research projects, such as the development of insecticides to kill or sterilize non-commercial bee colonies, according to a report by the House Research Organization.

Killer bees are prone to mass attacks and are inefficient honey producers and pollinators, said the report. The undesirable traits dominate after a few generations when they breed with domesticated bees.

The bees are migrating northward from South America and now are in Mexico about 560 miles south of Brownsville. They are expected to cross the border late this year or early next year, according to current projections, Rep. Renato Cuellar, bill sponsor, said.

The research money is needed this fiscal year because "this may be the last time they swarm before they come in," Cuellar, D-Weslaco, said. He sported a fuzzy yellow and brown bee on his lapel and distributed such fake bees to other members.

The killer bees will swarm from March through May, he said.

Gov. Bill Clements has designated the funding for the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station to conduct research as an emergency matter.

Another House vote is needed before the bill could be sent to the Senate for consideration.

In other action, the House gave preliminary approval to a bill that would prohibit courts from considering the income of a person's spouse when setting the amount of child support that person must pay.

Rep. Juan Hinojosa, D-McAllen, expressed concern about the measure. He said if a father remarries after divorcing his child's mother, the father's payments for such items as rent may go down and that should be considered when looking at his ability to pay child support.

Rep. Bill Clemons, D-Pollock, bill sponsor, said there are "a lot of people living out of wedlock to avoid this extra income being considered."

Hearings on core curriculum continue

Hearings will continue today to further define what courses should count in the core curriculum. The open hearing will be from 2:30-3:30 p.m. in 701 Rudder.

Dr. Manuel Davenport, chairman of the Core Curriculum Oversight Committee of the Faculty Senate, said all students and administrators are urged to participate in the discussions.

Soviet dissident to speak about glasnost

Dr. Alexander Goldfarb, the first Soviet dissident in the West allowed back to Moscow under the new Soviet policy of glasnost, will speak tonight at 8:30 in 601 Rudder.

University. Before defecting, he was active in the human rights movement and served as a spokesman for Soviet dissidents to the Moscow foreign press.

Goldfarb left the Soviet Union in 1975 and is an assistant professor of microbiology at Columbia University. His presentation, "Soviet Dissident: Testing Glasnost," is sponsored by MSC Political Forum.

Bill would forbid lie detector exams for assault victims

AUSTIN (AP) — Law enforcement agencies could not require a lie detector examination before pursuing a sexual assault complaint under a bill supported Monday by a woman who said she felt "on trial" during such an exam.

"I am a victim of sexual assault, and this is wrong to have a victim take a polygraph test. It's so wrong," said Susan Gillis, her voice breaking.

Gillis said she was assaulted in Flatonia a year and a half ago, and she subsequently took a polygraph exam that was performed at the Department of Public Safety in Austin.

"To ask someone to take a polygraph test and try to remain in a composed nature . . . I can't do it a year and a half later. To expect someone to do it right after they've been sexually assaulted is ludicrous," said Gillis, 22.

Gillis, who is from Dallas, said the exam lasted four hours and that she "cried through the whole thing."

"I really did feel like I was the one on trial," she said. "The results were inconclusive."

"It's very frustrating to know that the officials that are supposed to be working with you will not do anything until you have taken this polygraph test."

Chief Deputy Gary Reaves of the Fayette County Sheriff's Department, which worked on Gillis' case, said the department only occasionally uses polygraph exams.

Reaves said officers are told not to demand such exams but in some cases ask if complainants would be willing to take one. The exams are not confined to sexual assault cases, he said.

"Such an exam would not be admissible in court and is used as an investigatory tool, he said.

"Her case is still open. We did pursue the case," Reaves said. "Everything we got hold of was checked out. It's just unsolved."

The polygraph exam is not crucial to the department's work, he added. "We could probably make it just fine without it."

Rep. Juan Hinojosa, sponsor of the bill, said he has found many law enforcement agencies require a polygraph exam by the victim before taking a complaint. He said the "vast majority" of such cases involve sexual assault.

"We feel this is an insult, and it's an attitude of blaming the victim," said Hinojosa, D-McAllen, an attorney. He said the polygraph exam is not reliable.

The Battalion wins third place in regional newspaper contest

The Battalion won third place in the Best Daily Newspaper category in the 1989 Mark of Excellence Awards, sponsored by the Society for Professional Journalists.

Jay Janner, Battalion photo editor, won third place in the sports photo competition, with two other Texas A&M entries placing in spot news reporting and television feature.

The annual competition was open to Texas and Oklahoma college journalists and newspapers.

The first-place winners will advance to national competition with winners announced in the fall.

Following is a list of the winners in the categories that A&M students placed in:

- Best Daily Newspaper
First: Daily Texan, University of Texas
Second: Oklahoma Daily, University of Oklahoma
Third: The Battalion, Texas A&M University
- Spot News Reporting

Third: N/A

Wright

and said "it's one of the most outrageous readings of legislative history" he has seen. Overall, the report contains "a lot of noise, a lot of clamoring, but very little substance," he said.

Other matters before the committee were more clear cut. The panel voted unanimously that there was reason to believe Wright failed to report as gifts the use of a car and Fort Worth condominium he and his wife received from Mallick. Committee members voted 10-2 that Mrs. Wright's $18,000-a-year salary from a Mallick-Wright company should also be characterized as a gift, saying she did little or nothing to earn the money.

The panel also voted 10-2 that certain bulk sales of Wright's book, "Reflections of a Public Man," appeared to have been used to evade House ceilings on outside earned income.

"In the committee's view, seven bulk sales of Rep. Wright's book . . . demonstrated an overall scheme to evade the House outside earned income limit because (speaking) honorarium payments were recharacterized as royalties," Dixon said.

The committee voted unanimously to issue its statement of alleged violation formally charging the speaker with breaking the rules.

Forty-seven possible violations raised by Phelan were dismissed.

Those involved allegations of improper lobbying of executive branch officials, misuse of congressional staff and misuse of campaign funds.

Republicans were largely holding their fire Monday, aware that any attack could help Wright paint the investigation — prompted last June by a complaint from Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga. — as a partisan matter.

"No Republican is attacking Jim Wright," Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind. said. "This is a bipartisan report of the ethics committee. We are taking a wait-and-see attitude. We will serve as a jury. Let's not make this partisan."

The report said that Mallytco, a small investment company formed by Wright, Mallick and their wives, paid Mrs. Wright's salary even though it often had to borrow money from Mallick's own company to do so. Mallytco was little more than "a conduit for cash flowing from the Mallicks to the Wrights," the report stated.

"The nature and extent of the apparent gifts from Mallick indicates that Rep. Wright did not exercise reasonable care to avoid even the appearance of impropriety, which is the hallmark of the House gift rule," Dixon said.

On the issue of Wright's book, Phelan characterized the enterprise as from the beginning a ruse to evade limits on speaking fees.
