Youths aged from 16 to 20, drunk or on drugs, performed bar-barous, reckless actions," Tass said. It said 56 people had been killed, including many women and children, but the Communist youth daily Komsomolskaya Pravda said the death toll had climbed to 67

Most of those who lost their homes were Meskhi Turks, the newspaper said. The entire popula-tion of 300,000 Meskhi were uprooted from their homeland in Soviet Georgia by dictator Josef Stalin in 1944 and shipped to the Soviet East for forced resettlement.

In Moscow, a somber Gorbachev told the Congress of People's Deputies that authorities had the situation in the Fergana Valley under control, but that there were still incidents of arson and killings. "It has not changed for the bet-

The Congress joined him in appealing to Uzbeks and Meshki Turks, both of whom are traditionally Moslem, to halt the bloodshed. The Turkish minority, which adopted Islam centuries ago, has been pressing its demands to be allowed to return to its ancestral homeland in Georgia since the national parliament began meeting in Moscow late last month.
