City Manager George DiCiero said the city was prompted by U.S. Justice Department allegations that Rocky Flats dumped hazardous chemicals into Walnut Creek, which flows into a reservoir that supplies half of Broomfield's drinking water.

The creek provides about 5 percent of the town's total water needs. The government charged in an affidavit made public last week that Rocky Flats illegally dumped the hazardous chemicals into the creek on Nov. 15-16, 1988, and also that hazardous wastes were illegally hazardous wastes were illegally burned at the plant.

Federal officials said then they didn't believe there was any health hazard, and the state Health Department Monday said samples taken over the weekend of drinking water in Broomfield and other commuties was not contaminated by any of 59 organic substances typically

Mexican police link dropouts to heist of priceless artifacts

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A pair of archaeology-obsessed college dropouts with links to cocaine dealers pulled off the spectacular robbery of more than 100 priceless artifacts from the National Museum of Anthropology, officials said Monday.

Attorney General Enrique Alvarez del Castillo said the pair visited the museum more than 50 times, made sketches and plans, then jumped the fence, crawled in through an air conditioning duct and looted seven display cases on Christmas Day 1985.

Federal police recovered 111 of the 124 stolen artifacts and arrested one of the alleged thieves and six associates on Saturday

Officials said investigators were stumped for more than three years because they thought professionals had carried out the daring robbery.

"It turned out they were amateurs, two university dropouts who became obsessed first with having and later with selling the archaeological artifacts," said a source at the Attorney General's office, who insisted on anonymity.

The suspected associates include a U.S. man and an Argentine woman, Alvarez said.

He spoke at a news conference, where the pieces were exhibited on a long table covered with green

"Fortunately, the most significant pieces were recovered as you can see for yourselves. We can place no value on them — they are priceless," said Roberto Garcia Moll, director of the National Institute for History and Anthropology, which supervises the mu-

One of the most important pieces, a Zapotec mask of the bat-god Murcielago from the Monte Alban ru-ins in southern Mexico, had come apart and had to be Alvarez said the two college dropouts — Carlos Perches Trevino, 24, and Ramon Sardina Garcia staked out the museum, "visiting it more than 50 times to determine what were the most valuable pieces, making sketches and taking pictures and studying security.

Finally, in the predawn hours of Christmas Day 1985, they jumped the fence of the largely unguarded building in Mexico City's Chapultepec Park and crawled through an air-conditioning duct into

'They were able to open the glass cases easily and lift the pieces they thought were most valuable or which could easily be disposed of," he said.

Alvarez said the pair filled a canvas bag with 124 jade, gold and stone artifacts from Mexico's ancient civilizations and drove off in the Volkswagen they had left parked outside the museum.

He said they kept the treasure in a closet in Perches' parents house for more than an year, then took them to the Pacific resort town of Acapulco In Acapulco, they met some drug traffickers and tried to interest one of them, Salvador Gutierrez, in buying the artifacts. Perches and Sardina gave him several artifacts in exchange for an unspecified amount of cocaine but never completed a deal for the entire cache, Alvarez said.

"The sum of $1 billion was apparently mentioned, but apparently either Gutierrez was not interested or became suspicious and the deal fell through," Alvarez

Investigators finally got a break in the case when Gutierrez was arrested earlier this year in Reynosa, across the border from McAllen, on drug trafficking charges. He mentioned the artifacts while being questioned by police, Alvarez said.

Federal agents tailed Perches, who had moved back to Mexico City with the artifacts, for 45 days before the arrests last Friday.

Alvarez said that investigators initially thought 140 pieces had been stolen, but a careful inventory and declaration by the suspects last week showed the number of pieces lifted was 124.

The artifacts will be returned to the museum

Wednesday at a ceremony which President Carlos Salinas de Gortari will attend.

Alvarez said Perches is being charged with theft and damage to national treasures, which carry a sentence of 2 to 10 years imprisonment. An arrest warrant has been issued for Sardina, he said.

Cocaine trafficking and possession charges were filed against Perches, his brother Luis, a U.S. citizen named Gary Nathan Chafee and an exotic dancer and restaurant owner named Isabel Camila Maciero who performed under the name of The Princess Yamal. The charges carry a penalty of up to 25 years.
