Clements supports bringing drug leaders to trial in U.S.

AUSTIN (AP)—Gov. Bill Clements said Tuesday he favors bringing foreign drug kingpins back to the United States to face charges for crimes they commit in this country.

"Any way that we can get them into a proper court of jurisprudence, we need to do that," Clements said.

"And if there are actually charges on file here in the United States—regardless of which state it is—if we can bring about extradition and bring them back, I would be most happy about it," he said.

Clements' comments came after a speech to leaders of the anti-drug Texas Red Ribbon Council. The campaign is a nationwide anti-drug effort formed in 1985 after U.S. drug enforcement agent Enrique Camarena was tortured and murdered by drug traffickers in Guadalajara, Mexico.

On Monday, authorities in Columbia arrested Eduardo Martinez Romero, a reputed finance chief of the powerful Columbian drug cartel who is wanted in the United States on money laundering charges. He could be the first of several drug ring suspects to face trial in U.S. courts.

Clements said he favors using certain segments of the U.S. armed forces to aid the Columbian government, but he stopped short of endorsing any kind of "quasi-invasion" of the area.

"Americans, and certainly Texans, are not about to step aside as drugs and crime invade our communities," the governor told the council.

"Americans, and certainly Texans, are not about to step aside as drugs and crime invade our communities."

— Gov. Bill Clements

"This is literally a struggle for the control of our homes, streets, schoolyards and communities," he said. "If we do nothing, the kingpins, the dealers, and the junkies will win."

Clements vowed not to let illegal drugs "steal the hearts and minds of our children. This dark evil is entering our cities, our neighborhoods, and... even our homes with a ravaging force."

Earlier this month, Clements signed legislation that gives state law enforcement officials authority to seize property that is used, or intended to be used, in committing a first- or second-degree felony. In the past, state law enforcement officials were only able to seize property if it was being used in the commission of a drug crime or bought with the proceeds of the crime.

'Flaky' land appraisals boosted fraud scheme in Dallas, attorney says

LUBBOCK (AP)—A $135 million land-fraud scheme along Interstate 30 in east Dallas County was boosted by real-estate appraisals that were "flat flaky," a prosecutor said Tuesday, the last day of final arguments in the 6-month-old trial.

U.S. District Judge Sam Cummings prepared Tuesday to read his charge to the jury Wednesday morning. Jurors then were expected to begin pondering the fates of former Garland developer D.L. "Danny" Faulkner and six other defendants.

After two days of sometimes emotional final arguments by defense attorneys, prosecutors had the final say Tuesday. They explained the three-part, 88-count indictment that accuses the defendants of bilking Empire Savings and Loan Association of Mesquite and four other thrifths of $135 million through fanciful land appraisals and sham real-estate transactions.

The last two defendants to present final arguments were land appraisers Arthur Formann and Paul Tannehill. Attorneys for both said their clients did not over-appraise property, especially in light of the building boom that hit the I-30 corridor east of Dallas when the appraisals were made in 1982 and 1983.

But assistant U.S. Attorney Joseph Revez said Formann and Tannehill were paid to inflate land values. He said none of their appraisals for Faulkner and Toler reflected fair market values, and that they even got street names and zoning classifications wrong, indicating they sometimes didn't visit the sites they claimed to have appraised.

"You can't have any doubts the appraisals were flat flaky," Revez said.

Five defendants — Faulkner, James L. Toler, bankers Spencer H. Blain Jr. and Paul Arlin Jensen and real-estate salesman Kenneth Cansler — are charged with racketeering. Revez explained the Racketeer-Influenced Corrupt Organizations Act — known as RICO — to the jury.

All seven defendants are charged with conspiracy to defraud the thrifths and various fraud counts.

Cummings estimated it would take about two hours to read his 90-page charge to the jury.

Court rules Gilley can sell properties

HOUSTON (AP)—Country-western singer Mickey Gilley can start selling about 25 properties, including the famous Gilley's nightclub in Pasadena, owned by him and a former business partner, in order to satisfy a nearly $20 million judgment against the former partner, a judge ruled.

Attorneys for Pasadena businessman Sherwood Cryer had asked State District Judge David West to issue a temporary injunction to stop the real estate from being sold. The judge, however, denied the request Monday.

Gilley's attorney, Tom Alexander, said the appraisal and sale of the properties in Texas and one in Nashville, Tenn., will begin immediately.

"I feel a lot more secure about the judgment now that we have control of the properties," he said, but selling off all of the buildings and land will still not fulfill the judgment.

The judgment is near $20 million now because of interest earned in the past year, he said. Cryer lost a $17 million judgment to Gilley last year for breach of fiduciary duty.

The properties include the 17-acre Gilley's Club and rodeo arena, where the movie "Urban Cowboy" was filmed, other businesses, stores and vacant lots which are mostly in Pasadena, he said. The Nashville property on the popular Music Row has been appraised at $1.8 million, he said.

Cryer said after Monday's ruling that he is broke.

"They broke me, so I have nothing else to give," he said. "But I'm planning on staying if I just have my britches."
