Collins gives grand performance in upcoming movie 'Shirley Valentine'

(AP) — "Marriage is like the Middle East, isn't it? There's no solution." This is one of the many homilies expressed by Pauline Collins in the movie "Shirley Valentine," which will open in September. She has plenty of time to think up such things, since she spends much of her day in the kitchen of her modest flat, talking to the wall. That's right, the wall.

The boredom of housewifery has been explored from Shirley Booth in "Come Back, Little Sheba" to Carrie Snodgrass in "Diary of a Mad Housewife." So you might think nothing new can be said. Wrong. Shirley Valentine is the most heart-grabbing character on the screen in ages. Pauline Collins is likely to grab the Academy Award as well.

Willy Russell ("Educating Rita") first wrote "Shirley Valentine" as a one-character play. Collins won prizes for it in London's West End, then repeated the feat in New York, adding the Tony and every other award in sight. Russell's movie script adds the characters Shirley talked about in the play, though she remains the monologue she is at the wall and the camera.

Lewis Gilbert has a rare talent directing star-making roles, as proved with Michael Caine in "Alfie" and Julie Walters in "Educating Rita." His work with Pauline Collins is nothing less than brilliant. Characters who address the screen can come a bore. Collins never is round, wise face and her powerful delivery of one-liners are a delight to watch and hear.
