Texas Aggie Band pleased, enthused with retention rate

By Todd Connelley
Of The Battalion Staff

The Aggie Band, under the fresh leadership of Lt. Col. Ray Toler, set a standard of excellence by maintaining a 100 percent retention rate for the new fish class.

"We started Freshman Orientation Week with 105 fish and we still have 105 fish in the band," Toler said.

Toler credits the new senior class with creating a positive atmosphere for the incoming freshman. "The class of '90 came in with a new zeal and a fresh attitude about trying to build for the future of the Aggie Band," Toler said.

The first few weeks of school can be a severe culture shock for a freshman cadet. Meeting upperclassmen, overzealous sophomores and a sudden lack of television make it easy for a fish to think about quitting.

"The new seniors are trying to soften the blow of simply being a fish by making sure everyone is treated with dignity and humanity," Toler said. "The cadet leaders of the band have been in constant communication over the summer trying to come up with new ways to make the band a more appealing place for a new fish."

Some minor changes had to be made to attract more people.

"We are trying to tone down some of the harsh treatment a fish receives by making sure they are treated like human beings," Toler said.

A graduated haircut policy has also been implemented to allow seniors and juniors a little more hair than in past years, he said.

The new leadership style has boosted morale in the band to an all-time high, he said.

"Our motivation level is overpowering right now," he said. "The new drum majors are well-disciplined men and the bugle rank works as one machine marching across the field."

The perfect retention rate has one serious drawback — lack of available dorm space. Some of the members of the band have been forced to triple up.

"Right now we have 16 triples, that comes out to 48 actual cadets tripled up," he said.

A housing refund policy is being considered to justify the overcrowding problem.

On the horizon for the band this year is the possibility of traveling to Japan in January to play at two bowl games for the Japanese Football Association.

"They have sent us a proposal indicating they would sponsor us, but it's all still on the drawing board at this point," Toler said.

A 300-member Aggie Band is the ultimate goal for the new director.

"I am very hopeful that in the next three years we will attain that magic number," Toler said.

"The Aggie Band has always been the pre-eminent military marching band in the country and I plan to keep it that way," he said.

Expected ruling ends longest aviation trial in United States history

FORT WORTH (AP) — A ruling is expected Friday in a federal court lawsuit over whether the government or Delta Air Lines should take responsibility for a 1985 plane crash that killed 137 people.

U.S. District Judge David O. Belew Jr. will release the ruling Friday afternoon, staff members in his office said Thursday. The decision will end the longest major aviation trial in U.S. history.

Delta's lawsuit against the federal government claims that air traffic controllers and the National Weather Service failed to notify Delta pilots of hazardous weather at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport. The airline wants the government to pay all or part of the claims arising from the crash.

The government contends the flight crew didn't heed Federal Aviation Administration tower warnings, didn't ask for weather information and decided to fly into the storm. The government also says the jet's radar should have warned the pilots of weather conditions.

The Lockheed L-1011, en route from Ft. Lauderdale to Dallas, crashed trying to land at DFW Aug. 2, 1985 when it was caught in a downburst of wind during a thunderstorm. Twenty-seven people survived.

In May, a U.S. District Court jury in Ft. Lauderdale determined that Delta was not liable in the crash. Other juries around the nation have ordered damages to Flight 191 victims and their families, but only the value of lives, not the question of liability, was at issue.

Delta has paid at least $66 million in death, injury and damage claims from the 191 crash. In those cases, survivors who brought suits waived the question of liability.

The Ft. Worth trial began in March of 1988 and lasted almost 14 months, although it recessed several times so Belew could clear backlogged criminal cases.

Delta attorney John Martin, during final arguments, referred to witnesses who said the plane might not have crashed if pilots had tried to escape "nightmarish wind shear" he said they did not know about.

"The pilots of 191 were certainly not aware of impending doom," Martin said when testimony was over in April.

The flight crew was killed in the crash.
