condition they not be identified. They said 10 people were hurt during the stampede to escape.

In a similar rally at the nearby University of Durban-Westville, eight people were arrested when police swinging batons dispersed 500 students at a banned demonstration.

Police had no immediate comment on either of the protests.

Earlier Monday, police spokesman Brig. Leon Mellet said police were "prepared to come down mercilessly and hard on anyone who wishes to disrupt the elections."

Police have arrested more than 1,500 demonstrators and detained without charge an additional 240 activists since the campaign by anti-apartheid groups to defy segregation laws began Aug. 2, according to the Human Rights Commission, an independent civil rights group.

Thousands of black workers and students were poised for a two-day general strike beginning Tuesday to protest the exclusion of the black majority from the polls.

Major anti-apartheid groups and the country's two largest black labor federations endorsed the protests. The organizations have not called specifically for a general strike, which is illegal under the 3-year-old state of emergency. But in the past, such protests have resulted in mass strikes.

The multiracial University of Cape Town, the site of frequent anti-apartheid demonstrations, announced that it would be closed Tuesday and Wednesday.

"For the university to adopt an attitude of business as usual in the context of the tensions surrounding the elections and the denial of fundamental freedoms... would be neither principled nor possible," Vice Chancellor Stuart Saunders said.

The latest campaign against apartheid restrictions has included mass gatherings of blacks at whites only hospitals and beaches and a march on Parliament.

On Sunday, thousands of blacks marched on a Durban beach reserved for whites. Police arrested 50 people.

Police used whips and clubs to break up an Aug. 19 march in Cape Town. At least two Cabinet ministers of the governing National Party have expressed regret over that incident, but the government has given no public indication that it is ready to make major changes in remaining segregation laws.

Under apartheid, South Africa's 5 million whites control the government and economy and maintain separate districts, schools and health services.
