way. The argument between the parties, which means between the White House and Congress, is over who can solve the problem fastest.

And it is over new taxes. Bush says no; the Democrats say the cost of the drug war means that new taxes must at least be considered.

The Bush strategy points to a guns and butter sort of a war, al-though the president said that there would be hard times and high costs ahead. He said he wants to add $2.2 billion to the war on drugs. In budget terms, all but $716 million already is included in proposals the administration has sent to Congress. The White House would offset that by cutting other programs, one at the Pentagon, the rest on the domestic agenda.

"We can pay for this fight against drugs without raising taxes or add-ing to the budget deficit," Bush said. Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware, Democrats, meanwhile, said the government would have to raise more revenue to mount an all-out fight against illegal drugs but conceded it would be impossi-ble to enact a tax increase for that purpose as long as Bush opposes it.

Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the Rep. House Ways and Means Committee, said, "Unless the president supports the tax increases that will be nec-essary to fight this war, the drug dealers are going to win.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said, "Without the administration's support, the idea of raising taxes is futile.

Less than 24 hours after declaring a new war on drugs, Bush and his critics sparred from a distance - in speeches, on television shows and meetings with the press.

Putting a human touch on the drug problem, Bush visited a public hospital ward to see babies abandoned by addicted mothers. Wearing a blue smock, Bush qui-eted one 4-month-old baby boy by cradling him against his shoulder

"You see these kids and you want to try harder," Bush told reporters later.

Members of Congress received details on the Navy investigation the day before the scheduled public release of the 1,100-page report.

The explosion occurred as the No. 2 gun, the middle gun of three in the second turret, was being loaded for firing practice.

The guns and turret were de-signed in the late 1930s and use powder and shells manufactured nore than 40 years ago in World War II. There has been some speculation that the powder could have become unstable.

The Navy plans to release its 1,100-page report on the blast on Thursday with three admirals, including the No. 2 officer of the service, briefing reporters.

Guevara said in a statement read on Colombian TV that she canceled 'for personal security reasons.'

Lemos, who is also acting justice minister, commented on television on President Bush's Tuesday night declaration of his own war on drugs.

"I hope the aid to be offered to Colombia will be substantial,"Lemos said.

"The main thing is consumption," he added. "As long as drug use in the United States isn't suppressed, the world never will succeed in effectively combating narcotics trafficking.

Johnson said her preliminary diagnosis was that Bakker had suffered a panic attack last Wednesday after a witness, former PTL Vice President Steve Nelson, collapsed during defense cross-examination. Nelson had testified that he had told Bakker someone could go to prison because of the ministry's financial practices.

Bakker didn't come to court the next day, and lawyers told Potter he was hallucinating and hiding his head under a couch at their office.
