College Board reports SAT scores lower in '88 among women, minorities

NEW YORK (AP) — After almost a decade of steady gains, average Scholastic Aptitude Test scores among women and several minority groups slipped last year, The College Board reported Monday.

Overall, scores among the 1,088,223 high school students who took the SAT in 1989 showed little change for the fourth consecutive year. Average verbal scores dropped a point to 427 compared with 1988; math scores were unchanged at 476.

Average composite scores on the ACT Assessment, the college entrance test that predominates in 28 states mostly in the Midwest and West, dipped 0.2 points in 1989 to 18.6. Averages on the four-part exam, assessing English, math, social studies and natural science skills, are scored on a scale of 1 to 35.

Critics for years have accused both tests, especially the SAT, of being biased against women and minorities, and the latest averages again displayed a wide race and gender gap.

White students gained two points on their combined SAT scores to 937 — averaging fully 200 points higher than blacks, whose math-verbal scores were unchanged from the previous year at 737.

Women's combined scores dipped two points to 875; male test-takers averaged 934, one point higher than a year earlier.

The SAT, sponsored by The College Board and administered by the Educational Testing Service in Princeton, N.J., is the predominant college entrance exam in 22 states. The two-part, multiple-choice test is scored on a scale of 200 to 800, with a combined 1600 being a perfect score.

The ACT, taken by 855,171 high school students last year, is administered by American College Testing, headquartered in Iowa City, Iowa. The organization announced that, beginning October, students will receive 12 scores instead of the current five, including seven new subscores in specific content areas of English, math and reading.

College Board President David M. Stewart attributed the continuing lag in SAT averages among women and minority students to inequities in educational opportunities.

He nonetheless noted that scores among most minority groups have been gaining more rapidly than among whites during the 1980s, at least until this year. Average scores among blacks, for example, had gained 28 points on the math portion of the SAT and 21 points on verbal since 1979.

Mother Teresa improves after heart treatment

CALCUTTA, India (AP) — Mother Teresa's condition improved Sunday after the Nobel laureate received a pacemaker to steady her heartbeat and heavy doses of antibiotics to fight fever, doctors said.

A statement issued by Woodlands Nursing Home said the 70-year-old Roman Catholic nun known for her work with the poor "responded well to the treatment" after a temporary pacemaker was implanted late Saturday.

"Her temperature is normal, her heartbeat is steady, and she is cheerful," one of Mother Teresa's doctors said in a telephone interview. He spoke on condition of anonymity. Earlier in the day, a hospital source said doctors feared Mother Teresa might be developing pneumonia.

Mother Teresa, whose devotion to the destitute and dying earned her the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize and the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the highest U.S. civilian award, became ill Sept. 3.
