TO BUILD A SOLID FUTURE

It might seem far-fetched to you to suggest that common, everyday garbage could be the foundation of an exciting career filled with personal growth and professional development. If so, you need to talk with Browning-Ferris Industries.

Consider these facts:

- BFI, founded in 1969, has grown into a world leader in the waste services industry with current revenues of over $2.5 billion and an impressive 20% annual rate of growth since 1983.
- BFI is also engaged in such environmentally-conscious activities as recycling, waste-to-energy conversion and asbestos abatement.
- BFI is seeking a select few interested in making significant contributions to our environment while building a satisfying, rewarding career.

Like to know more? Be sure to schedule an interview with BFI's representatives when they visit your campus to meet with candidates for degrees in

Group plans to help clean environment, fight MSC expansion

By Mia B. Moody
Of The Battalion Staff

A co-president of the Texas Environmental Action Coalition at A&M said at a meeting Wednesday that the group plans to initiate environmental cleanups and recycling programs and fight against the MSC expansion project.

Liz Edwards, a sophomore natural resource conservation major from Minneapolis and co-president of TEAC, said the group was formed this past March by a small group of concerned students with big goals.

"Our goals are to increase community awareness of the need to clean up the environment as well as the need to recycle useable products," Edwards said. "Another goal is to initiate programs aimed toward improving the environmental situation."

Edwards said one program that the group will participate in is the "Adopt a Beach Program" in Matagorda.

"We will leave on Sept. 23 and spend the weekend cleaning up the beach," she said. "We are going to take cars and we invite everybody to tag along."

Edwards said the group also plans to participate in a tree planting project with the Bryan-College Station Parks Department.

She said they also plan to resist the MSC expansion issue. Also doing the research they will get students involved with the fight against the expansion, she said.

"We will continue with 'Project Learning Tree,' a program to help students in kindergarten through eighth grade get involved with environmental activities," she said.

Edwards said the group also plans to begin a campus-wide recycling program with the Residence Hall Association, the Women's Chapter and the landscape architecture department.

"In addition to these programs we have a monthly cleanup in an area in the community," Edwards said.

"Our group also has a picnic each month and a field trip."
