that just about everyone in the band got their chance to sing. From MacGowan's "Cuchulainn" to Terry Woods' "Young Ned" to drummer Andrew Rankin's raucous version of "Star of the County Down." During the concert it was obvious that two thirds of the band were having a blast, the other third was blasted. MacGowan sang when he could remember the words, Spider Stacy sang and played the harmonica and tin whistle when he could find them at the base of his mike stand.

Complex block for 'The Battalion' advertisement. Includes the title 'The Battalion' and a cartoon illustration of a man holding a coupon that says 'Wait! Don't line the bird cage with that Battalion! There's a coupon in it that I want that's good for a free tongue depressor down at the pharmacy!' Below the cartoon is the text 'Ads that get action' and 'Campus and community news'. At the bottom left is the address: 'The Battalion 216 Reed McDonald 409-845-2611'.

sheer persistence, our Battalion press passes and furious name-dropping, we finally found ourselves going through the gloomy "Hospitality Room" backstage and up the dark stairs to where the real action was after the concert. Our first encounter was Chevron, a charming and graceful man who, while tired, was sober. MacGowan appeared unconscious on a couch in a side room, obviously in no mood to speak to the press. The rest of the Pogues were horsing around playing pool and making machine gun noises with Spider Stacy animatedly complaining about the lack of tequila, but not the drunken debauchery expected.

"The Big Easy" with Dennis Quaid, is exotic, intense and believable in her role as Helen. Pacino is great. There's no other way to say it. You like his character and feel sorry for him. Besides being a powerful romance, "Sea of Love" is a well-written mystery. Is Helen a killer? Will she kill Frank? You probably won't figure out the mystery, and that makes the film more fun. "Sea of Love" was directed by Harold Becker. He generated fresh suspense using old tricks such as dark hallways. Another pleasant surprise was John Goodman's (from the TV sitcom "Roseanne") performance as Sherman, Frank's friend, and later partner during the murder investigation. Goodman provided most of the funny moments and was a needed tension breaker. This film is not a mirage. It is an excellent example of a good movie that somehow made it to the Bryan-College Station movie desert. There's a new movie in town, and surprise, it's actually good. Don't miss it.

made an exact transcript from the tape. Now everyone will know what you're really like, Dave, because I'm about to print that very transcript right here in front of the entire world.

Transcript from 05-09-89 phone call with Dave (placed at 3:23 a.m. CST): Dave (after seventh ring): "Uhhh... uhhh... yeah. Dave here." Me: "Dave! It's Dean. What's up, guy?" "What!? Who is this?" "It's Dean. You know, Dean Sueltenfuss." "Gene? Gene who?" "No, Dean. Dean Sueltenfuss. Remember, I sent you those clips last month and asked you about getting that newspaper job? Did you read 'em, Dave? What'd you think about 'em?" "Oh, Lord." "Dave, you still there? Everything OK?" "How the hell did you get my phone number?" "Well, I—" "If you ever call me again, I'll see to it that you never work at a newspaper for as long as you live!" For you folks who joined us late, let me explain what just happened. Dave Barry, the famous syndicated columnist, upon realizing that I knew he was stealing columns from me, panicked when he was confronted with the truth and then threatened me.

I know that's not what it sounded like from the transcript, but the tape was kind of fuzzy. Just trust me, Dave was scared. Damn scared. And he should be scared. Every night I spend several hours at my typewriter, slaving away, straining my creative genius to produce a humorous, well-written column. And when I get up the next morning and retrieve my copy of the Harold from the doorstep, what do you suppose I find? That's right — my column with Dave Barry's name and picture on it! Dammit, Dave, enough is enough. If you can't think of your own column ideas, you'll just have to starve. I know what you people are thinking. You're thinking, "This jerk is lying. What a geek. He's obviously made up this whole story." Well... well... you're right. Dave Barry hasn't been stealing my columns. It's just that the guy is so funny. He doesn't leave any material for the rest of us writers who occasionally try to write something funny. I mean, there are only so many humorous ideas floating around out there. And frankly, Dave, you've been taking more than your fair share.

This isn't a threat, Dave, but if I were you, I'd start being a little more careful. You never know when a disgruntled columnist who's run out of material might retaliate against you. But hey! I don't mean me. I love ya', Dave. You're the best. Life is full of little surprises, though. You could be run over by a bus the next time you walk across a street, or an engine could fall off of a DC-10 and come crashing through the Hairnet newsroom. Or you could be sitting in your car, getting ready to turn the ignition switch when — BOOM! — your car explodes. Hey, I'm not making any threats, Dave. Not me. I'd just be a bit more careful if I were you. Being a syndicated columnist can be a dangerous business.
