Soviet writer Tolstaya presents lecture tonight

A nationally recognized Soviet writer and great-grandniece of Leo Tolstoy will speak tonight at 7:30 in 206 MSC.

Tatyana Tolstaya, who is spending a semester as a visiting lecturer at the University of Texas, will discuss her own work and the changing literary and political scene in the U.S.S.R. Her talk is sponsored by the Bryan-College Station Sister City Association, the Texas A&M Student Russian Club and the Department of Modern Languages.

JROTC cadets plan visit to A&M this weekend

Almost 2,000 JROTC cadets from 40 high schools will visit Texas A&M this weekend as part of the annual "Aggie For A Day"

The Corps of Cadets sponsors the activity each year for JROTC students from Texas and Louisiana. The program is a part of Corps recruiting efforts.

The junior cadets will visit members of the Corps of Saturday. They will tour the campus, eat in Duncan Dining Hall and view a presentation with Corps Commandant Maj. Gen. Thomas Darling and the Corps Cadet Commander Matt Poling in Rudder Auditorium.

The presentation will be followed by the film "Something Extra" and a yell practice.

After this, the high school students will watch the Corps marchin at 12:30 p.m. and attend the Texas A&M-Southern Methodist University football game.

award to Koldus, said nominees are judged on four criteria: service above and beyond what is required; a professional attitude and relationship with peers and stu-dents; loyalty and dedication to the student personnel profession at all levels; and evidence of leadership, creativity and innovation demon-strated by writing, research and other accomplishments.

"Support must first come in the form of a nomination," Duke said. "The more support we receive for the nomination, the more likely the individual is to win."

Koldus received an ample amount of support from current and past coworkers, as well as students.

"I received numerous letters of support on Dr. Koldus' behalf," Duke said. "For many years, Dr. Koldus has been extremely active in this organization."

Duke said another TACUSPA member, Elizabeth Proffer, dean of sities before coming to A&M as vice president for Student Services in August 1973.

Kevin Buchman, A&M student body president, wrote a letter to Duke supporting Koldus. Buchman said he thought Koldus deserved to be recognized for his good work.

Laughing, Koldus said, "If you live and work somewhere long enough, they'll reward you for your ium, then local taxpayers can pay extra. Once the state has divided the federal and state money and applied it to a local education for all districts, then it should be left up to the local school district for anything above an essential education.

That's all we owe to a child — a decent teacher, decent facilities and decent studying material — so they may reach a basic education and can go out into the work force," he said. "If you don't do that, you're going to pay later. We can either educate children today, or we can pay for them to sit in our prison system, or be on welfare, or be unemployable and be less than they could have been, in serving on the Board of Regents, the future.

"You've got to get money at the lowest possible level and reinforce financially from the state the local dis-trict attorney, the local sheriff and the local police department," he Delord also said the state police should be used to set up regional task forces that have a coordinated information system throughout the state. He said this would allow every region in the state to be connected by the same law enforcement since 'criminals know no jurisdictions.'

Delord said he would support the proposal of having a student on the Board of Regents.

"I'm not afraid of an interest group having representation," he said. "I don't understand why anybody would be afraid of a student representing the interests of the 40,000 students at A&M. They see funding of law enforcement at their having the right to be rep-the local level. their having the right to be rep-resented on the Board of Regents."

"This award to John is long overdue," he said. "I think his selection was so obvious that many of us thought he had already gotten it.

Then becoming serious, Koldus said he enjoys his work and lifestyle, and this makes the award even more

"Having someone honor you in that profession is icing on the cake,"
