Voters have 21 amendments to chose from

• No. 1: To boost lawmakers' pay from $7,200 a year to $23,358 beginning in 1991. The salaries of the House speaker and lieutenant governor would rise to $46,716.

The proposal also would remove the current constitutional requirement demanding voter approval of any legislative pay hike by tying law-makers' salaries to the governor's pay, which lawmakers approve

• No. 2: To authorize issuance of $500 million in additional Texas water development bonds, including money for improvements in the South Texas colonias where hispanic immigrants live in third world conditions without running water or sewage facilities.

dents objecting to dissection.
"We will in time, I'm sure, have a student who will have an aversion,"

Joiner remembers one student's objections several years ago to A&M's dissecting practices. She wrote to Joiner, protesting the use of pound dogs for physiology labs. She told him that she did not benefit from the dissection and a video or book would have done as well, Joiner said.

"I wrote her back and tried to explain to her where we were coming from," he said. The animals were in the pound and were going to be destroyed anyway, he said.

"It was not something causing the animal any more suffering than if he had been put to sleep," Joiner said. 'I don't know if she accepted that.' Actually, the use of dogs bothers Joiner, as well. People abandon their dogs, which end up in the pound, he "That's a societal problem we've never addressed in this country," Joiner said. He said he would be happy if the dogs were not in the pound, but veterinary students do benefit from studying them. But I think some veterinary and medical schools have developed al-ternatives if a student has philosophical or ethical problems," Joiner said.

"Medical schools, I think, can more easily do away with live animal labs than vet schools." Even though specific laws protecting college students who refuse to dissect do not exist, Joiner said most schools offer alternative programs for students with philosophical or ethical objections to dissection. Schools without alternative programs will probably offer special arrangements, he said. "A school that would resist that would be in court pretty quickly," he said.

Joiner said even though it works hardships on instructors when students do not follow class plans, A&M will try to work out alternatives to dissection with students who object "With all of the technology today, they could probably make a model that mimics tissue better than doing a dissection on an embalmed animal," Joiner said.

The following is a list of the 21 proposed amendments to the state constitution. Election day is tomorrow. On-campus students may vote in the MSC.
