Voters go to polls to decide fate of amendments

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas voters head to the polls Tuesday to decide the fate of 21 proposed constitutional amendments, with topics ranging from how much to pay legislators to abolishing seven county surveyor jobs.

Although the amendments will change the Constitution for all Texans, light voter turnout statewide is expected to give extra clout to Houston residents, who also are choosing a mayor and a successor to the late Congressman Mickey Leland.

Secretary of State George Bayout projects statewide turnout at about 12 percent of the 8.2 million registered voters, and he said one-third to one-half of that may come from Harris County.

Fueling interest in the Houston races are 11 candidates seeking the U.S. House seat that belonged to Leland, who died last August in a plane crash in Ethiopia.

The Houston city elections got last-minute attention after incumbent Councilman Jim Westmoreland made a racial slur over the renaming of Houston Intercontinental Airport to honor Leland.

Heading the list of constitutional amendments before all voters is a proposal to more than triple — from $7,200 a year to $23,300 — the salaries of members of the Legislature.

That proposition also would remove the constitutional requirement that voters approve future salary hikes by tying lawmakers' pay to the governor's salary, which the Legislature sets.

The pay raise proposal goes before voters after months of news reports about lobbyists spending more than $1.8 million to entertain legislators during their 140-day regular session this year.

A companion amendment, Proposition 11, would nearly triple lawmakers' daily expense allowance from $30 to $81, the maximum allowed by federal tax laws.

A second major amendment, Proposition 2, has drawn support from most state leaders. It would authorize issuance of $500 million in additional Texas water development bonds, including money for improvements in the South Texas colonias.

Among those urging its passage were Comptroller Bob Bullock, who noted that nearly 1,000 colonias exist in Texas.

"Tens of thousands of our fellow Texans... are living in Third World conditions, conditions that are virtually unknown in other parts of Texas and other parts of the country," Bullock said.

Some other propositions are:

- No. 3: To authorize $75 million for programs to aid development of small business, agricultural production or new products within the state.
- No. 21: To issue up to $1 billion in tax-free college savings by the Higher Education Coordinating Board.
