The Wall crumbles
East German officials work to restore order

BERLIN (AP) — West Germany's president on Sunday urged Western nations to help East Germany recover from the exodus of its citizens, and the mayors of East and West Berlin shook hands in no man's land to usher in a new era of relations.

Another hole was cut through the Berlin Wall to the roaring cheers of spectators. East Berliners continued to flood the western half of the city, buying up anything they could afford with their $55 of government "welcome money."

The Communist Party announced an emergency congress for next month during which party chief Egon Krenz will try to solidify his power base. Krenz indicated a new Central Committee will be elected to carry out various reforms aimed at stopping East Germans from abandoning their Communist homeland.

Since Krenz replaced hard-liner Erich Honecker as party chief Oct. 18, 10 full members of the ruling 21-member Politburo have lost their positions. There also has been pressure for the 163-member policy-setting Central Committee to resign.

On West Berlin's fashionable Kurfuerstendamm avenue, about 1,000 leftists marched through the streets shouting slogans against German reunification.

More than 3 million East Germans headed West over the weekend, while several hundred thousand people made their way to Berlin from other countries to join a 4-day-old celebration that showed no sign of slowing down.

"Winter is at the door, the ailing have to be taken care of," von Weizsaecker said, alluding to the near decimation of parts of the East German economy and the severe shortage of medical personnel as a result of the West exodus of East Germans to the West.

More than 200,000 East Germans have left East Germany since September. There have been reports that medical students have been drafted to work in hospitals to make up for the loss of doctors and nurses.

Turning his attention to other nations, von Weizsaecker, the former West Berlin mayor, said: "The West should be ready to help East Germany with open hearts and open doors."

He cautioned that the West should not interfere in East Germany internally but urged the East Berlin leadership to stick to its promise of free elections.

Weizsaecker later went through the new Berlin Wall crossing at Potsdamer Platz, took several steps into East Berlin and exchanged a few words with some border guards as he was mobbed by hundreds of people. West Berlin Mayor Walter Momper and his East Berlin counterpart, Erhard Krack, met at Potsdamer Platz, once a vibrant center but now a bleak no man's land bisected by the Berlin Wall and blanketed by concrete watchtowers.

Their highly symbolic handshake represented a start of a new era of optimism on closeness for the German people, although Krenz and other officials have flatly ruled out reunification of the countries.

Outside Berlin, East Germany opened at least 10 more border crossings to West Germany for the seemingly endless stream of visitors who created mammoth traffic jams.

British rock star Joe Cocke joined the party in Berlin with a performance that drew thousands to the Deutschlandhalle concert hall in the western sector, about two miles from the wall. He was among more than 20 musicians performing at the concert, which police said was staged partly to draw crowds from the wall.

China accuses U.S. radio of trying to 'stir up chaos'

BEIJING (AP) — China on Sunday accused the Voice of America radio network of trying to "stir up chaos" in its report on a Communist Party meeting considering an economic restructuring plan.

VOA reported on the policy-making Central Committee meeting "in a purely fictitious way," the government news agency Xinhua said.

It said VOA reported that provincial party officials fiercely debated with central party leaders over financial matters, and that economic measures adopted at the meeting aimed to return China's economy to government control.

"There was no fierce debate whatsoever. . . . This was a sheer fabrication by VOA," Xinhua quoted an unidentified "authoritative source" as saying.

The source "accused the U.S. government-run radio station of attempting to stir up chaos for despicable means," Xinhua said.

A text of the Chinese-language VOA broadcast was not immediately available.

China has repeatedly lashed out against VOA for "spreading rumors" during the April-to-June protests for democratic reforms, which ended in a military crackdown that left at least hundreds dead.

Criticizing VOA is one of the Chinese government's ways of expressing displeasure with the U.S. government, which Beijing accuses of involvement in the popular uprising.

Two VOA correspondents were expelled by China following the early June crackdown. One accredited reporter remains in Beijing.

The four-day party meeting ended with a communique calling for austere living over the next two years to combat inflation, excessive growth and corruption.

It also outlined four general goals, including cutting consumption, tightening control over finances, realigning the industrial structure and boosting production.

"But the VOA, in its Chinese-language service, distorted the contents of the communique," Xinhua quoted the official as saying. "This will surely arouse the indignation of the Chinese people."

Foreign ministers meet with Arafat

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The foreign ministers of France, Spain and Ireland met PLO chairman Yasser Arafat in Tunis Saturday and later said they were "working seriously" to push forward the Middle East peace process.

The three ministers are scheduled to meet President Hosni Mubarak Sunday and then fly back to Europe, where they will meet with Israel's prime minister, Yitzhak Shamir.

French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas told reporters at Cairo International airport that the aim of the ministers tour was to gather information so that they could help advance the peace process in the area.

"We are working seriously," Dumas said, but declined to give any details on his talks with Arafat. Arafat briefed them on the Palestinian Liberation Organization's position regarding Secretary of State James A. Baker's proposal to start a Palestinian-Israeli dialogue.

Shortly before the meeting in Tunisia, PLO spokesman Ibrahim Souss told reporters that his group continues to demand that it alone choose the Palestinian delegation to a Palestinian-Israeli dialogue and that it alone should represent the Palestinians in any peace negotiations.

Israel refuses to deal with the PLO, which it calls a terrorist organization.
