Attorney: Houston cop 'did what he had to do'

HOUSTON (AP) — A city police officer who fatally shot a man last week during a routine traffic stop "did what he had to do," his attorney said. Officer Scott Tschirhart shot Byron Gillum six times after stopping him Wednesday for a traffic violation. Tschirhart has told police that Gillum, a 24-year-old security guard, reached for a gun.

The fatal shooting by a police officer was the second to occur in less than a month. On Oct. 31, Ida Lee Shaw Delaney was killed during a highway shoot-out involving an off-duty police officer. Both shootings have prompted protests in the community and some have called for the establishment of a civilian board to review the police department.

But attorney Ed Lasof said Saturday that Tschirhart did what he had to when he shot Gillum. The shooting marked the third time that Tschirhart has killed a man in his seven-year career with the Houston Police Department.

"I think that when all the facts are in he'll be vindicated," Lasof, an attorney with the Houston Police Association, said. "I think he is a good officer. And I think he did what he had to do."

The officer emptied his .38-caliber service revolver, striking Gillum four times in the back, once in the arm and once in the abdomen.

"Under the circumstances, I think, he did what he had to do out there," Lasof said. "If somebody has got a weapon, you don't get a lot of time to decide whether it's going to be him or you."

Police have said that after being shot, Gillum managed to crawl out the passenger window of his car. He ran about 20 feet before he collapsed and died.

Gillum's unfired .357-caliber pistol was recovered in the car.

Lasof suggested Tschirhart saw the gun and did not have time to wait and see if Gillum was going to use it.
