LUCY IS LOST! Golden retriever busted out over Thanksgiving. call 696-9239. 62t12/5

As the Eagles and Cowboys have been exchanging barbs about Buddy Ryan's alleged bounties, now comes a new controversy — the use by the 49ers of below-the-knee "cut blocks" by offensive linemen.

Such blocks are legal, but they're also considered a questionable and injury-causing tactic by many players and coaches. And they are used most extensively by San Francisco, supposedly a "finesse team" rather than an one with an intimidating reputation, like the Eagles or Bears.

Why? Because they're effective. It's no coincidence that the 49ers began using the cut block a decade ago, when Bill Walsh took over a 2-14 team and started it on the road to three Super Bowls and now, perhaps, a fourth.

"It's a legal block and happens all of the time in football," says coach George Seifert, who took over this year from Walsh. "It's part of the game and a style of blocking that we've used for the past 10 years." But other teams deeply resent it, as the Giants did when Lawrence Taylor was knocked out of their 34-24 loss to the 49ers Monday night when he was hit below the knees by rookie tight end Wesley Walls.

Taylor, who has missed only one game because of injury in his nine-year career, sprained both his right knee and ankle and missed the final two-thirds of the game. Giants coach Bill Parcells said Taylor would miss Sunday's game with Philadelphia, which could decide the NFC East title.

"Cheap shots," New York linebacker Carl Banks muttered.

"He was cut from behind," said defensive end Leonard Marshall. "Our guys were upset by the way he got hurt. We don't teach our guys to play that way."

The result was a brutal game between two teams which entered the game 21st (Giants) and 13th (49ers) in penalty yardage. They put on a performance more likely to occur in an Oilers-Raiders game — 19 penalties between them for 15 yards, including two late hits on quarterbacks and three other late hits.

Not counting the numerous shoving matches that drew no flags.

Seifert said there was no attempt to "get" Taylor on a play in which he was lined up on the left side of San Francisco's formation while Roger Craig ran right. But he also acknowledged that it was a cut block.

"It was an excellent block," Seifert said. "In fact, as the block ended, Walls went from a high block to a low block and cut him."

That raises a wider issue as the 49ers sail along at 10-2, testing blocking rules to the limit.
