NHL franchise for Houston and Dallas possible

HOUSTON (AP) — The president of the NBA's Houston Rockets said hopes of landing a National Hockey League franchise in Texas probably rests on Houston and Dallas sharing a team.

Rockets president Ray Patterson is representing Rockets owner Charlie Thomas in a bid to get a new NHL franchise. The league's board of governors may consider expansion of pro hockey when it meets later this week in Florida.

"I don't think Houston or Dallas has a chance of getting a hockey franchise on their own," Patterson told the Houston Chronicle on Monday.

"But if they try to share one, with 20 or 21 games in each city, I think the NHL might go for that. And I think we can sell a 21-game package here."

Patterson said if the NHL governors approve an expansion plan to include Texas, he'd contact potential investors in Houston and Dallas to try to put his idea together.

The NHL has not had a presence in the South since the Atlanta Flames fizzled in the late 1970s and moved to Calgary, Alberta. In the 1970s, Houston had a team called the Aeros in the defunct World Hockey Association.

"I remember when the Aeros out-drew the Rockets by 2,000 a game," Patterson said. "Now we're selling out. Who knows what hockey could do here now?"

Patterson is looking for dates to fill the Summit, the Rockets' arena, because the National Basketball Association team gets 49 percent of the receipts for events held there.

"The Rockets' net revenues have been dropping because The Summit has too many empty dates," he said.

He also sees a Texas hockey team as opening the sport for television exposure in the South.

"We can put a hockey into a lot of homes in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas," he said.

Cowboys

Cowboys punter Mike Saxon also said two Eagle players contacted him and told him about the bounty.

Johnson already has filed a complaint with the NFL, but said he'd like to file a comment or two with Ryan. Johnson tried after the game; Ryan just left the field.

"I would have talked to him after the game, but he wouldn't stay on the field," Johnson said. "He just took his fat butt into the dressing room."

However, don't look for the Cowboys to go delivering any cheap shots.

"I don't want us to be intimidated, but if we ever resort to going after an opponent to injure him and take him out of the game, then I'll get out of coaching," Johnson said.

"I really don't have any respect for him."

Still, I like a lot of Dallas fans. I would love to see Zendejas go into Philadelphia and on his first kickoff, set his sights for Ryan on the sideline and take out Ryan's knees.

Instead, I'll have to suffer through another humiliating defeat... at least until the Cowboys regain their previous form as champions.

"It's history as far as this incident is concerned," Johnson said. "We will remember it though."

"And someday, we will be good enough to have our time."

Bow

left in the game, and the Gents capitalized on their sudden rebounding advantage.

The smaller Gents outrebounded the Aggies 55-48 in the game, and Centenary Coach Tommy Vardenan thought the Gents' smaller size only helped them in the fast-paced game.

"It's to our advantage in a fast-paced game," Vardenan said. "When you've got big guys playing from free throw line to free throw line, they can't get in there (quick enough). The little guys have the advantage in a game like this."

A&M found itself down by nine points with two-and-a-half minutes to play, and suddenly started playing inspired basketball.

The Aggies turned to a full court press, and the Gents were rattled a bit by the sudden pressure.

Freshman Brooks Thompson stole an inbounds pass, and dished off to an open Milton driving to the lane. But Milton missed the easy layup.

"Our shots not falling was taking something out of us," Milton said. "We kept shooting, and unfortunately they weren't falling. Our intensity went down."

Metcalf agreed, saying that when the Aggies started pressuring them, the Gents played better.

"If anything, we slowed down a little bit," he said. "We came to life when we got scared, but they definitely picked their game up a couple of notches. They whipped us on the offensive boards."

Rhea said the rebounding advantage the Gents had was a big factor in the loss. Although the Aggies were optimistic at halftime, he said, they couldn't keep up their intensity in the second half.

"We just let it drag in the second half," Rhea said. "We came out aggressive, but got soft. We let them beat us on the offensive boards. We just let it slip."

That they did. After a missed three-point shot by Suber, Rhea grabbed a big rebound in heavy traffic, then went back up and cut the lead to 82-78 on a thundering dunk.

But Milton picked up his fourth foul while preventing an easy layup, and the Aggies still found themselves down by four after a Patrick Greer free throw.

Suber got the ball at the top of the circle, and pump faked twice to throw Greer and Byron Steward out of the play. He hit the ensuing jump shot to keep the game within four points.

However, Milton fouled out of the game as he tried to steal the ball from Robinson in the backcourt on an inbounds pass. Robinson's two free throws all but sealed the Gents' victory — giving Centenary a 86-80 lead with 37 seconds left.

All hopes of an Aggie miracle died on the next A&M possession. Thompson tried to shoot a three-pointer, but couldn't get around the defender. He instead tried to dump it off to Suber in the paint, but the Gents stole the ball and made two free throws after a Thompson breakaway foul.

After a Ricks free throw with 19 seconds left that cut the lead to 89-82, Centenary ran the clock out.

A&M senior forward Ray Little, who finished with three points and seven rebounds, said the Aggies need to find the right combination of players. Once they do, he said, they'll start winning.

"It's going to be just like last year — we've got to come together and we've got to blend," Little said. "When we do, it's going to be a good ballclub. There's no doubt about that."

"It just takes time," Milton, who finished with 19 points and 10 assists, said the Aggies need to find that right five — soon.

"We just need to find one combination that we can stick with," he said. "You get one set of five consistent players who play all the time, and just go with it. We're pretty close to finding that combination."

Snow lands Butkus as No. 1 linebacker

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Michigan State's Percy Snow, who has patterned himself after some of football's most ferocious defensive players, on Tuesday won the Dick Butkus award as the top linebacker in college football.

The 6-foot-2, 235-pound senior who made 163 tackles this season, grew up just 10 minutes from the Pro Football Hall Of Fame in Canton, Ohio. He said he had always looked up to Butkus, Jack Lambert and Mean Joe Greene.

"They were my idols, my boy-hood heroes, and I always wanted to be like them," Snow said during a telephone hookup with the Downtown Athletic Club of Orlando, which presents the award.

Snow was picked by a 13-member panel over Keith McCants of Alabama, James Francis of Baylor, Ron Cox of Fresno State and Andre Collins of Penn State. Snow collected four first-place votes and 27 points, while McCants had four first-place votes and 21 points, based on a 2-1 system.

"He's a good student, a good citizen and should be the first defensive player selected in the NFL draft," said Michigan State coach George Perles. "He gets a tremendous break on the ball and creates an explosion through the line."

"I haven't seen any better," said Michigan coach Bo Schembechler.

Snow said he had hoped to win the award, "but the team goal came first."

He also said he believed defensive players should get more consideration for the Heisman Trophy. Only one defensive player — Leon Hart of Notre Dame in 1949 — has won the Heisman and Snow said the award designation should be for best offensive player.

Astros may be considering trade offers for pitcher Scott

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros are contemplating a trade involving ace pitcher Mike Scott to either the Boston Red Sox or the Philadelphia Phillies, according to a published report.

The Houston Post, in a report from Nashville, Tenn., site of the annual winter baseball meetings, said the Astros were discussing a trade of the right-handed pitcher to Boston for outfielder Mike Greenwell or to Philadelphia for Von Hayes and a left-handed pitcher.

"Any time we talk to any team, we always try to improve our offensive situation, but I won't mention the specific players we discussed," Astros General Manager Bill Wood said Monday.

"I don't feel good about the conversations we had today ever leading to anything, but you never know. What you thought was a routine discussion might blossom into something else the next time you talk."

While Wood listened to offers from other teams about Scott, he said the days' discussions did not leave him optimistic about solving the nagging offensive problem that has plagued the club since it won the National League West in 1986.

Wood told The Post he would trade Scott or any other starting pitcher only in the right circumstances and that the Astros wanted an offensive outfielder and a young pitcher in return.

Scott, a Cy Young Award winner in 1986, finished second in the voting for the award as top National League pitcher in the 1989 season.

The Phillies said the Astros were looking for a left-handed pitcher (Hayes) and a left-handed pitcher possibly Don Carman.

"We talked to Houston, but don't see us doing anything with them," Phillies General Manager Lee Thomas said. "I'm not sure they don't have any good players, but I just don't see how we're comparable."

"The game was ours," Hickey said. "All we had to do was execute the plays."

A&M did just that, with Madala hitting 26 points out of her 33 in last half.

The Sooners struggled to get back by throwing up several point attempts, but failed to gain ground as the Lady Aggies ran the clock taking the victory.

"This was a big win against the Eight team," Hickey said, "and helps us a lot."

"Our kids played hard. Especially comming off a long road trip with finals and all."

This win brings A&M to 4-2 the year, and 4-0 at home. The Sooners drop to 2-3 on the year.

The Lady Aggies will have next three days off before traveling to Baton Rouge where they'll face the Louisiana State Lady Tigers Saturday, Dec. 9, in a 7 p.m. game at the Pete Maravich Assembly Center on the LSU campus.
