Fackler said he thinks the College of Science will go through a tough period, both fiscally and organizationally, as A&M develops its agricultural programs, especially the life science program.

"I think it is time for a new person to come in who can give a fresh start to the whole process at the dean's level," Fackler said. "I think one of the saddest things in academic administration is the institution that has administrators who stay in their jobs too long."

Fackler said he regrets stepping down at this time because he believes A&M President William Mobley will continue to lead the University well.

a declaration of war at "It's a difference of opinion based on different perspectives," Blair says. "But what would it take to get us to fight? Will we fight for a principle? I hope we Bush's request, he said. 'You can't be against debate in a democracy, but you need to look at the consequences of that debate," Blair says. "If Congress decides against declaring war and Bush ignores it, he should be impeached. If Congress doesn't start impeachment, they should be impeached for violating the Constitution.'

The United States no longer will be a world power in the minds of its allies if Congress refuses to authorize war, Blair says.

Hopefully, politics will not complicate constitutional issues further, Blair says.

"If the Constitution is worth dying for, I don't want cheap politics to twist it around," he says. Blair says he believes a draft would not be needed to fight a "If the United States cannot win with the 400,000 troops already there, it will be World War III, then there will be a draft," Blair says. "Realistically, that won't happen."

Faced with bleak odds of winning against the coalition led by the United States, Blair says he does not understand Hussein's actions and doubts that anyone in the Western World does either.

"I'm not up on his culture so I have no way of knowing what's real, an appearance, a bluster, or fatalism," Blair says. "If this is built up to be a religious war against the United States, do they mean they will die for Allah?"

However, the defection of six Iraqi helicopter pilots Monday might give the Unites States vital information about Iraqi war plans, he says.

"It is fundamental to know their capabilities for war, including morale among their military," Blair says. "Because pilots are usually the most well-trained and well-educated in an army, means that morale is probably low. Because of their high rank, they also will know more about Iraqi plans than a lower ranking

The pilots also will be more receptive to questioning since they risked their lives defecting across the Saudi Arabian border. Blair says they cannot safely return to

The helicopters also will be inspected to determine how well they are equipped. Lack of night vision equipment, for example, would mean those helicopters could not operate effectively after Because Iraq does not have a military-industrial complex and imports most of its military hardware, including spare parts, its military capabilities have suffered from the blockade, Blair says.

"Considering the young age and relative lack of combat experience in the U.S. armed forces, it's amazing they were given a chance to defect instead of being shot down when they crossed the border," Blair says. "A lesser trained army might have been too nervous and jittery to give them a chance. Instead, we have information about Iraqi troop morale and technical readiness.

Blair also says though Bush said he will not negotiate with Hussein, he is trying to work things out peacefully.

Bush is right not to reward Hussein for his aggression by caving into his demands," Blair says.
"If Hussein did pull out of Kuwait, boundary negotiations be-tween Iraq and Kuwait would probably follow, along with an international conference on the Palestinian problem.'

The approach taken by Bush toward Iraq's aggression reflects his generation's experience dur-ing World War II, Blair says. In Hussein, Bush sees another Hitler who should be stopped before he becomes too powerful.

"War does not sit well with younger generations because they didn't experience World War II," Blair says. "They say there's an oil glut; they say the Kuwaiti Emir is a dictator and they don't want to lose loved ones for cheap oil.

Besides road construction, the physical plant is taking care of other repairs and renovations.

Sugg says the MSC Flagroom's floor is being refinished. He says the repairs include replacing wornout wood and sanding and refinishing the floor. He says the redone wooden floors will have a darker finish similar to the Rudder floors.

Sugg says the physical plant also started replacing deteriorating pipes in the Commons dining area.

"We are redoing the pipes be-cause of leakage, but the project is scheduled to be complete Feb. 8," he

The dining hall will be closed but students will be informed to alternate dining halls.

Sugg says the physical plant is also working to replace the tile on the walkway and stairwell of the Engineering and Physics Building. He says there were reports of the tile getting slippery and they decided to redo the walkway to eliminate safety

"Construction on campus is pretty much winding down," he says. "And the MSC expansion project is one of the last major completions.
