Adviser

there was little coordination between colleges and departments and no consistency intheadvising a student received.

Based on the CSAB's findings at the Regents meeting, A&M President William Mobley requested that Gage, Koldus, Saatkamp and Buchman form a committee and report its findings to him by June 15.

Committee members will include representatives from the administration, faculty, and graduate and undergraduate students. Robertson said he is committed to having at least four students on the committee.

One of those students might be Reilly, who said he is willing to work on the committee to see some changes made for the benefit of students and faculty.

"I see the need for some full-time advisers to do the simple degree requirements and such that faculty members don't have the time to do," Reilly, the student liaison to the Faculty Senate, said. "The faculty could then be able to advise on career questions." Reilly said if full-time advisers cannot be hired, then faculty members should be compensated. Under the current system faculty members are not paid for their work as advisers.

Robertson said the committee must begin its work as soon as possible to reach Mobley's deadline.

"We're going to start our work off with a quick review of what is ongoing in counseling and advising," he said. "Then, we'll look at what should be ongoing before making our recommendations."

Berlin

Sloan said she thinks one of the greatest threats to East Germany is exploitation by West Germany. Visitors to the country often buy goods at cheap prices and sell them in the West at great profit.

"Tourists can go over and live for a few dollars each day," she said. "One man from West Germany came over and bought an encyclopedia with 12 volumes for $200. It was worth more than $1000, and he went to West Germany and sold it there."

Young West Germans often go drinking in East German bars because they are cheaper than those in the West, she said.

West German banks also are contributing to this exploitation by offering better currency exchange rates than the East German government, Sloan said. When Sloan was in Germany, the official exchange rate was three East Marks (East German currency) to one Deutsch Mark (West German currency).

Sloan said many banks were offering exchange rates of five to one. This means West Germans receive more East German currency from the West German banks than they would from the East German government. Sloan said the problem is further compounded by the fact that, although carrying East Marks acquired in other countries into East Germany is illegal, border guards rarely enforce the law.

On the topic of reunification, Sloan said that if it happens at all, it will take a long time to occur. "It's going to take a few years," she said. "It's not going to change instantly. There are too many other countries involved in what's going on. The Soviet Union is frightened because Germany has a very powerful army and they have a lot of thinkers, a lot of brains sitting up at the higher positions—especially in East Germany."

Whatever the future of the two Germanys may hold, Sloan says that when the Berlin Wall opened, the entire Eastern Bloc became a better place.

"It's such a big change in the world," she said. "It's something so great. There are people who were separated from their families by the whole situation and who hadn't been able to see their relatives for years. It was just so wonderful to see people able to get back together."
