knows, tomorrow he may change his mind.
Zhou said that if Congress had overridden the veto, it would have sent a much stronger signal to the Chinese government.
Both Zhou and Ge were actively involved in the lobbying effort for the bill, in addition to participating in protest marches in Houston. They helped organize the Southwestern United States for the Visa Committee, a group of Chinese students in the United States committed to gathering support for the student movement in China. Two other goals the student committee set were to obtain guaranteed protection from the United States and to convince the government to put more pressure on the Chinese regime, Zhou said.

Although the U.S. government has imposed some sanctions on China, including suspending military shipments and high-level diplomatic contacts, Ge said the administration's "soft policy" stance toward China is wrong. He favors a hard-line approach that will inform the Chinese government that the actions they took on June 4 will not be tolerated.

Zhou said the Chinese people are acutely aware of world events. "They look for the United States to stand firmly on the people's side," Zhou said. "The United States has long been the symbol for freedom and democracy."

However, Bush advocates a measured response to protect "this vital relationship for the United States."

"I don't want to see a total break in this relationship, and I will not encourage a total break in the relationship," Bush said on June 5. "It would be a tragedy for all if China were to pull back to its pre-1972 era of isolation and repression."
In 1972, President Richard Nixon traveled to China and laid the groundwork for the formal relations established in 1979.
Zhou is understandably cautious when predicting China's future. He believes China will be a democracy to collapse sooner or later, there no question about it." Ge said. "Their days are numbered. I shouldn't be surprised to see a change overnight like Romania."

Zhou said that when it does change, most Chinese students the United States will return to their homeland to help establish a democracy.
"Really, most of us love our country," he said. "Also, we know what China needs, we know what we do for China. This generation will bring many benefits to both our someday, but the old regime impedes the progress.

"The democratic movement is the worldwide trend," he said. "(China) can't resist. (The students) feel this should be the way for China someday. I really expect that day will come soon."
Although he hopes the succession of power will be peaceful, he fears there may be blood because the "people already have a hatred toward the current leaders."
"When the democratic movement starts again, I don't think people will still wait and let the government decide what they should do," Zhou said. "There will be a revolution."
Ge agrees.
"They (Chinese regime) are going

The president holds the same view and said the United States will continue to encourage democratic change in China.
"I do think this change is inevitable," Bush said. "It may go a couple of steps forward and then a step back, but it is on the move. The genie (of democracy) will not be put back in the bottle. And so I am going to take steps that will encourage a peaceful change."
"I'm convinced that the forces of democracy are going to overcome those unfortunate events in Tiananmen Square."
To Zhou, they have to.
"It can't get any worse. It must get better."
