The Texas A&M women's basketball team is hoping to bounce back from a 95-70 loss against Texas last Friday, as it heads to the hills of Arkansas to take on the Lady Razorbacks tonight.

Tipoff at Barnhill Arena is set for 7 p.m.

The Lady Aggies are 15-7 overall and 7-4 in the Southwest Conference with just a half game still separating them from the Texas Tech Red Raiders, who are in third.

Arkansas slipped into the USA Today's Top 25 poll at No. 25 last week. UA continues to trail the No. 1 SWC leaders, Texas, by one game with a 12-1 record in the conference and a 19-3 overall standing.

The Lady Aggies suffered only their second home loss of the season as the Lady Longhorns upended the Lady Aggies before a season-high G. Rollie White Coliseum crowd of 2,043.

UT and A&M were tied after the first five minutes, 12-12. But the Lady Longhorns went on a 14-2 run and the Lady Aggies managed to score just a pair of free throws over the course of the next eight-and-a-half minutes.

Texas extended its lead to as much as 18 points in the first period and took a 39-25 advantage to the locker room at halftime.

At the beginning of the second half, Texas built up another huge lead of as much as 25 points and was able to hold A&M off to win the game.

last few minutes of the game we extended our game far, which allowed Texas to open up their game.

Senior forward Lori Dillard was the Lady Aggie leading scorer for the game with 17 points. Junior post Louise Madison contributed 15 points, and junior guard Yvonne Hill added 13 toward a losing cause.

Arkansas is coming off a 74-60 win over Southern Methodist Saturday in Fayetteville. The Lady Razorbacks held a slim 32-29 lead at halftime, but Corey Cheanult came in off the bench for UA to contribute 10 points and a game-high nine rebounds to give Arkansas the victory.

The Lady Razorbacks own a 17-2 advantage in the series with the Lady Aggies. Arkansas had won 13 in row from A&M before the Lady Aggies broke the stranglehold with a 60-56 win two years ago in College Station. A&M's other victory came later that same season as the Lady Aggies squeaked out a 59-58 win in the opening round of the 1988 SWC Tournament in Dallas.

Earlier this season at G. Rollie White, the Lady Aggies outperformed the Lady Razorbacks (43-33) and committed fewer turnovers (17-19) but came up short as they lost, 70-64. A&M experienced shooting trouble both from the field and the line during that game.

"They (Arkansas) see the floor well; they shoot well and they have good basketball sense," Hickey said. "We will play with intensity, we'll have a chance to show our advantage in athletic ability. We did that last time but we just couldn't get the ball in the hole."

The Lady Aggies will make their last road trip of the regular season this weekend when they travel to Houston to take on the Rice Owls on Saturday in a 5 p.m. game at Autry Court.

Brewers' Molitor signs three-year contract to avoid salary arbitration

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Paul Molitor became baseball's ninth player to average $3 million per season when he agreed Monday to $9.1 million, three-year contract with the Milwaukee Brewers.

Molitor's contract — baseball's seventh highest in average annual value — calls for him to receive a $1 million signing bonus and annual base salaries of $2.1 million in 1990, $2.9 million in 1991 and $3.1 million in 1992.

He will get half of the signing bonus immediately and the other $500,000 on Feb. 15, 1991, deferred at 10 1/2 percent interest.

The 33-year-old Molitor had filed a salary arbitration request of $3.25 million and the Brewers countered with $2.6 million. Molitor batted .315 last season, when he made $1.75 million, including $350,000 in bonuses.

Molitor, who had been scheduled for a hearing on Tuesday, is the 14th member of the Brewers who filed for arbitration and settle. Milwaukee general manager Harry Dalton has never had a player go to an arbitration hearing.

"I thought certainly two or three" would go to a hearing, Dalton said Monday, adding that there was no magical formula for avoiding arbitration. "There is nothing I can isolate. You'd have to ask the players. It's not something I'm trying to perpetuate. My job is to sign the best club that I can."

"It's a process that is necessary each year. We still have some others to sign, but those are players with less experience. We are glad the major people have been taken care of."

Molitor announced on Dec. 19 that Robin Yount agreed to a three-year contract but it still has not been reported to the owners' Player Relations Committee and the Major League Baseball Players Association. He filed for arbitration as a formality when his contract — reported to be worth $9.6 million — was not finalized by the filing deadline.

Dalton said earlier that Yount's contract does not have to be filed until opening day in April. However, both the union and the PRC would have to approve an extension past Tuesday's deadline to complete arbitration hearings.

The Brewers still have 14 players unsigned — pitchers Don August, Tony Fossas, Mark Knudson, Angel Miranda, Steve Monson, Jaime Navarro and Al Sadler; catcher Charlie O'Brien; infielders Billy Bates, George Canale, Gary Sheffield and Bill Spiers, and outfielders Darryl Hamilton and Greg Vaughn.

Molitor tied for fifth in the American League last year with 194 hits, tied for sixth in batting, was sixth in multi-hit games with 55, tied for eighth in doubles with 35 and tied for ninth in stolen bases with 27.

He led the Brewers in stolen bases during 1989 for the 11th time in his 12 seasons, and had his second best career totals in games at 155, at bats at 615, hits and doubles.

Jordan scores 30 to lead Bulls past Rockets

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan scored 30 points, leading the Chicago Bulls to their third straight victory, 107-102 over the Houston Rockets Monday.

The Rockets had a chance to tie the score with a 3-point field goal with 14 seconds left, but Buck Johnson's shot went off the rim. Scottie Pippen then fouled with eight seconds left. He hit two free throws, insuring Chicago's fourth victory in five games.

Houston's Akeem Olajuwon had 32 points and 17 rebounds and teammate Mitch Wiggins scored 24 points.

Stacey King scored 17 points for Chicago and Ed Nealy had season-highs of 10 points and nine rebounds.

The Rockets got within 87-86 when Derrick Chievous made one of two free throws, but they never caught up.

Patterson

said. "I hit a few home runs."

Although Patterson said he felt that he could play college baseball right out of high school, he wasn't recruited as a baseball player. He was recruited to play football for all the Southeastern Conference schools, Pittsburgh, Clemson and A&M.

"It's very hard to get a full scholarship in baseball," he said. "I was glad to get the football scholarship, so football is my main priority."

But Patterson couldn't shake his love for baseball, so he decided to try out for the A&M squad. When he talked to head football coach R.C. Slocum about playing baseball after to wait a year because Offensive Coordinator Bob Toledo was in the process of installing a new offense.

Patterson waited and learned the offense well enough to be the Aggie's third-leading receiver last season.

After the football season was over, he approached baseball coach Mark Johnson about playing baseball. Paterson said that Johnson welcomed him to try out, but promised not to waste Patterson's time if he didn't have room on the team.

"Coach Johnson was really straightforward with me," Patterson said.

Patterson admitted that Jackson's success in both sports has been inspirational, but he said that he would have played baseball at A&M anyway.

"I feel like in life, if there's something you have the ability to do, why not do it?" he said. "Instead of looking back and saying 'I could have done that'."

"I didn't want to face that, so I decided to go out (for baseball). If you have an ability, why not play?"

Patterson said that spring practice went well for him, but he's still not the hitter he'd like to be.

"I feel like my hitting is coming along. Of course, hitting takes more time, but I should be there as the season progresses."

Patterson said that mental preparation for a baseball game is tougher for him than a football game.

"Being a receiver, you have to be ready for a fight, because the big guys are out to get you," Patterson said. "It's a little harder to get ready for baseball. When I'm sitting on the bench, I'm constantly thinking that I might get into the game, so I've got to be ready."

Playing both sports requires Patterson to be on the field most of the year. He said that he misses the free time.

"Spring break is coming up, and I won't get a chance to go home (because of baseball)," he said.

Not being able to see his parents is a blow to Patterson, who names them as his biggest role models.

"My parents have been very supportive of me from little league on up to college," Patterson said.

He has passed along his positive outlook by working with some of the youth near his home in Mississippi.

Patterson said that he encourages young people to do their very best.

"Whatever you're involved in, give it your best," he said. "Because, down the road, you don't want to look back and know that you didn't try as hard as you could."

permission to interview Davis, but a statement said he has not officially contacted any coaches.

"We are in the process of evaluating several possible candidates for the position," Crow said. "I have plans of talking to any coach in the immediate future."

Davis, who is 46-10 in two years in Idaho, has the Vandals at 21-4 in season and in first place in the Sky Conference at 11-2. He is from Mississippi, recruits extensively in the Southeast and five of his current players are from Texas or other prior college basketball.

"I think maybe that's a reason they're interested," Davis said.

But he said he also is interested in remaining in Idaho. Davis, Hunt and Idaho President Elsie Zinser are negotiating a three-year contract that would be undervalued for any coach at the school.

A&M officials said the search for a new coach will begin in earnest this season.

The Aggies are 12-14 overall and 5-7 in the Southwest Conference.
