Station, he said. The event's target areas are the Lincoln Center neighborhood in College Station and along Martin L. King Jr. Drive in Bryan.

Peggy Calliham, public relations and marketing manager for the City of College Station, said city staff researched the problems of high weeds, rubbish, dilapidated structures and junk cars in the Lincoln Center neighborhood.

This year's Big Event will include a Special Olympics softball tournament at the College Station Central Park and a Brazos Food Drive, White said. This is the first year for the tournament.

The Big Event will kick off at 8 a.m. March 24 on Kyle Field. Activities are scheduled to run all day with the majority of work performed between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

All students are encouraged to participate, White said. Individuals can sign up to volunteer, as can organizations. Students can request specific tasks to complete.

when they return home," Stout said. He said many international students who attend large American universities work in laboratories equipped with sophisticated computers and electronic equipment. Many of these students are frustrated when they return to their home countries and aren't able to work with such technology, Stout said.

Dr. Bill Harris agreed that the lack of technology in many countries creates problems for international students enrolled in American universities.

He said many countries need educational institutions equipped with the latest technological advances. However, Harris said education is not a cure-all for any country's problems.

"Without intellectual freedom there is no possibility to utilize the concepts of science and put them to work on behalf of a better, or richer or more complex life," Harris said.

Dr. Dean Corrigan said many countries that are recently becoming more "intellectually free" are looking to the United States as an example.

"I wish we could be what they think we are," Corrigan said.

He said Americans take their freedom for granted, while people in other countries are willing to give up their lives for freedom. "It's not how you get it (freedom) it's what you do with it that counts," Corrigan said.

Corrigan said Americans should learn how to use their freedom to benefit fellow human beings.

He also said people should use education as it was intended.

"Education is more than just learning how to make a living," Corrigan said. "Education is learning how to make a life."

Tonight at 8 p.m., to end International Week, a talent show and traditional dress parade will be in Rudder Auditorium. Tickets are available for $3.50 at Rudder Box Office.

breaking the relationship, and therefore they are not as likely to come to counseling."

The following are five stages people go through while getting over a broken relationship:

- Manuevering — trying to figure out how to handle it by blaming others.
- Concluding — forming beliefs about the situation, like thinking the opposite sex is not trustworthy.
- Letting go — taking a close look at how they are clinging and then finally letting go.

- Objectifying — looking at the relationship objectively and trying to understand how and why it happened.

- Re-emergence — getting on with their lives and trying new relationships.

Stachowiak said the counselors hope students can recognize what stage they are in so they can gain hope from understanding that there will be an end to the pain.

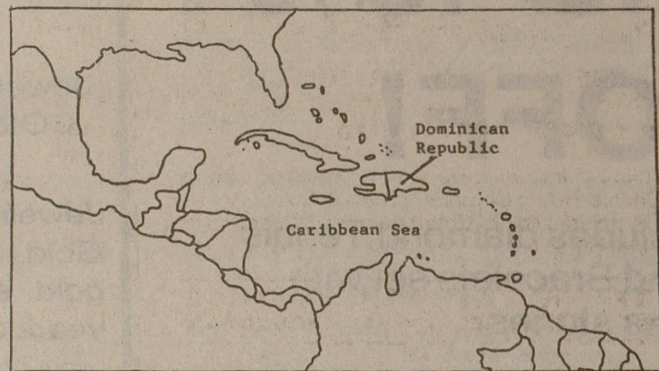

Rabinowitz said the counseling service is part of the division of Student Services and is created only for students.

The program has had students of all ages and situations, such as married students, older students, returning students and young students, she added.

"I know there are more people that are in the situation of being broken up (from) a relationship and we hope to get more of a response from students," Rabinowitz said.

If anyone is interested in the relationship group program, they can contact the Student Counseling Services office.
