critical condition at the University of Pennsylvania Hos-pital, and 35 were discharged by early afternoon.

All three of the dead were among seven passengers trapped in the wreckage, authorities said.

Rescuers, aided by a mobile surgical team and special cutting equipment, freed the last two people nearly five hours after the accident, police Commissioner Willie Williams said.

Transit officials said they were looking into a report that a dragging electric motor on one of the cars may have caused the derailment.

Conductor Steven Young said the train had just left the station when it suddenly pitched to the left. A tun-nel support beam crashed through the side of his car

The power in the subway tunnels was cut off to protect rescuers.

The transit authority said it had no passenger count for the train. The capacity for each car was listed at 200 people and passengers said there was standing room only

Traffic in the area was virtually shut down as emergency vehicles arrived on the scene. The transit agency had to shut down the east-west subway line and also trolleys that go underground four blocks away from 30th Street station to complete their trip to downtown.
