changed, the leases had to be changed and the computer records at the main office had to be changed. "It is a major inconvenience," Hancock said. "The changes created a lot of problems for the kids in my complex, but nobody complained. "I am really upset. I think now that 11 complexes have gone to the trouble, they should make every-body change."

She said there have already been problems with pizza delivery, mail delivery and police service. "The police called because they couldn't find an apartment," Hancock said. "They hadn't been given a copy of the new map, so I took them one myself."

Hancock said she is not sure if the renumbering system will help policemen and firemen in the long run. "My complex has been here for 12 years, and everybody knew where every apartment was," Hancock said. "Now everyone has to relearn all the apartment locations."

Report reveals money allotted for city housing went unused

DALLAS (AP) — Tens of millions of federal dollars to help fix housing and neighborhood problems were not used by Dallas city officials, a published report said Sunday.

And, of the millions spent from Dallas' allocation under the Community Development Block Grant program, few dollars benefited poor people, the Dallas Morning News reported.

The newspaper also reported that Dallas City Auditor Dan Paul neglected for years to release federally-required audits of some of the largest and most troubled recipients of community development funds targeted for the poor.

"Much of the money is not being spent, and much of the money that is being spent is not being spent on the right people," said Harryette Ehrhardt, a member of the Community Development Advisory Committee.

"Much of the money is not being spent, and much of the money that is being spent is not being spent on the right people."

—Harryette Ehrhardt, Community Development Advisory Committee member

group appointed to oversee spending. Contract conditions imposed by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development require city to meet spending deadline the next two years or lose millions.

City Manager Richard Knight said his staff is working to resolve problem of unused money, which he called "very significant."

Ehrhardt said, "It means elderly people dying every winter because of the condition of their houses means men who ought to have work who don't. It means red-lining, bad houses, delinquency, lack of jobs and whole communities falling in disrepair. It literally makes me physically ill."

Whittles said he thinks most people who are not in the Corps do care about the organization. However, he said he gets aggravated when people complain about little inconveniences, like Corps runs blocking traffic.

"It really gets me when people complain about the Corps making cars stop for 20 seconds," Whittles said. "Then these people go home and spend two hours of their time writing a complaint letter to the paper."

"I understand the runs are a little inconvenient sometimes, but I think people should be motivated by the fact that others are out getting exercise."

Whittles said he thinks the Corps has a public relations problem on campus and hopes this will change soon. He said most people do not understand what the Corps is about. "We are normal people," Whittles said. "I want people to have a more positive reaction when they see someone in uniform on campus."

Whittles said the Corps is at a major turning point because of all the policy changes taking place. He said recent incidents have forced a revision of the Corps' physical training policy.

"Making cadets do push-ups does not promote leadership qualities,"
