Candidates

said the committee's purpose is to create long term and annual contributions to the student services fund.

"I'm looking forward to raising about $75 million," Sandlin said.

Leah Hanselka, Residence Hall Association president, asked the student body presidential candidates if as president, each were given $100,000 in student services fees, how would they allocate the funds.

Because many freshmen aren't aware of services such as fish camp, the Corps Freshman Orientation Week and counseling services, Garrett said, he would allocate the funds to developing programs to inform students of the services that A&M has to offer.

Clevenger said he would use the money to fund student organizations because participation prepares students for their futures. He said A&M has approximately 700 student organizations, more than any other university in the nation.

"It is one of our strongest points here at Texas A&M, and consistently the MSC and other areas are running short in funding in student programs," Clevenger said.

Ammons said money should be awarded to professors who have excellence in teaching and advising. Also, the University Police Department should be allocated funds in order to promote crime prevention awareness because the prevention unit team consists of only two people, she said. More money could be used to hire more officers. The student programming system is also in need of money and resources, Ammons said.

Gattis said student services money should go to provide for the students. Organizations such as the Aggie Muster committee, Parent's Weekend committee and the various MSC committees constantly have problems with funding, he said.

Sandlin said being given $100,000 to allocate is probably a student body president's dream come true and also his worst nightmare because of all the various areas that the money could be utilized. Sandlin said he would spread the wealth on safety, academic advising, teaching excellence and multiculturalism.

The candidates agreed on the following issues:

- The University should focus on undergraduate studies and improving the quality of teaching on an undergraduate level.
- Communication is the key to reconciling the sometimes conflicting responsibilities of representing the student body and maintaining good relations with the University's administrators.
- Education is the answer to preventing crimes.
- Students should be more concerned and educated about the needs and wants of international students.
- A better understanding of the needs and concerns of graduate students is needed.
- Multicultural concerns should be better addressed.
- Alcohol consumption at the bonfire site is unnecessary and belittles the sacred tradition.

written by Professor of Biology Michael Kemp. The memorandum contained defamatory language about Lamoreux which was published to one or more third persons and damaged her reputation. The complaint states that these statements were made with malice or lack of good faith with gross indifference or reckless disregard of Lamoreux's rights.

As a result of the above charges, Lamoreux is seeking actual, punitive and exemplary damages and monetary damages for the loss of past and future wages, past and future retirement benefits and other benefits she would have accrued, past and future normal raises she would have received and interest.

Lamoreux also seeks damages for impairment of reputation, personal humiliation and mental anguish.

The complaint also asks that in

All defendants will get copies of the plaintiff's original complaint and be given opportunities to respond before a court date is set.

Lamoreux and her attorney, Roy D. Brantley, have demanded a jury trial.

In the event of a favorable verdict and payment of damages, Lamoreux could collect from one or all of the defendants.

Lamoreux also asks for the payment of attorney fees incurred in this complaint, as well as fees expended for any appeals to other courts.

The other four defendants named in the suit are Dr. Clinton Phillips, associate provost and dean of faculties; Dr. John P. Fackler, Jr., dean of the college of science; Dr. Timothy Hall, head of the department of biology; and Dr. Michael Kemp, a professor in the department of biology.
