State attorneys seek changes Noth Batt in county jail requirements

neys plan to ask for changes in the unusual joint order signed earlier this month requiring the state and Harris County to reduce the number of state prisoners in the county jail.

The attorneys say they will ask federal Judges William Wayne Justice of Tyler and James De Anda of Houston to clarify — if not modify or even delay implementation of —

"It's a question of whether we can meet what the court is asking us to do," Kirk Brown, general counsel for the prison system, said.

The crux of the issue is interpreting what the court meant when it ordered a net reduction of 9,130 prisoners in the jail by Aug. 31, assistant Attorney General Bob Ozer, who is representing the state in the lawsuit,

The order, signed March 15 but made retroactive to Feb. 1, specif-ically requires that 300 state prison-have any other mechanism by which houses by May 31 and another 300 by Aug. 31. Brown said the confusion lies in whether that means 600 more than the state already has moved or is projected to remove through its normal channels

If fewer than 300 have been re-leased by May 31, some jail inmates will automatically have 30 days shaved from their sentences.

The prison system can remove prisoners from county jails three ways: by accepting them into state facilities, releasing them on parole directly from jail or transferring them to a halfway house before being released on parole.
"Our concern with the language of the order is that it seems to imply that we are supposed to take 600 inmates in addition to what we can take out (by those three means)," Brown said. "That is troublesome to prisoners are included in the net duction and if that's the case, is says, it's "within the range of pos bilities" that the state can comply.

The Texas prison system, under federal order from limiting capac to 95 percent, accepts an average 182 prisoners a week from Ham County — the largest alloading given any county. Using that for mula plus additional bed space the will become available as new prison are completed, Ozer said the said will be transferring to its own fac ties about 7,000 prisoners by Au der - would have to be remove from the county jail through pard or transferring them to half houses at an average of 300 pc

Sheriff now questions morality of undercover police practices

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Nueces County Sheriff James Hickey, who testified in a drug trial that he didn't object to informants offering sex in exchange for drugs, now says he has begun to question the morality of undercover practices. "Undercover officers have to live a lie. They have to have another identity altogether," Hickey said. "My thoughts were, 'What are we doing to these officers? How does it affect their lives?' " Hickey is reviewing techniques used by undercover officers and the possible moral questions raised when Seeking answers, Hickey has turned to moral theologians, whom he declined to identify, for their opinions on whether deceit used in undercover work presents moral problems. Hickey hasn't instituted any departmental changes, but said he has made it clear to the officers that sex should never be offered — by officers or informants — in exchange for drugs. The sheriff's qualms surfaced during last week's trial of David Gordon Underbrink, who was convicted of delivery of cocaine. He will be sentenced April 23

A pretrial motion by defense attorney Albert Pena

III asserted that a female informant performed oral sex on Underbrink in the women's restroom of a bar last The informant, a former prostitute, testified that she did not provide sexual favors for Underbrink, but that she did agree to go home with him if he would give her boyfriend some cocaine. Hickey testified during Underbrink's trial that he didn't object to informants offering - but not supplying — sex in exchange for drugs, if that's what it took to

But the sheriff said he later began to question the morality of undercover practices.
"I got to thinking about it, and it really bothered me," Hickey told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times. "This is catch narcotics dealers.

fendant claims entrapment, the courts examine whether an officer's act prompted the individual to something he or she was not predisposed to do. "When it goes too far, there are some constitution and legal problems," Rothstein said. "If it is just the fer (of sex for drugs), it seems to me it's not much won the first time this has ever come up. Nobody in the partment had authorized that. It was (the informant) illegal, but it is considered unethical.

Some law professors said the offer of sex may not

versity Law Center in Washington, said that when ad than the traditional sting operation.' In his closing arguments, Pena argued that the info mant's promise of sexual favors constituted entrapment because it caused Underbrink to commit a crime is wouldn't have committed under normal circumstances 'That's one of the weaknesses that men haveappeal to lust," Pena said. "Throughout history, me have done many things in the name of lust.

Father John Tuohey, an ethics professor at the Cath olic University of America in Washington, said that long as police simply participate in an event that would have occurred with or without them, then the action usually is viewed as ethical and legal.

Father Richard McCormick, who teaches Christi

ethics at the University of Notre Dame, said he believe that using sex as an inducement is improper. "The fer of sex is a positive inducement for wrongdoing," Ron DeLord, president of the Combined Law En forcement Association of Texas, said there are som things that officers certainly should not do - like en changing sex for drugs - but that on the whole, the are no clear-cut rules about what undercover office can and cannot do. "It's not black and white. I think common sens should prevail," DeLord said.
