Senators pay relatives from funds

Newspaper reports legislators keep business deals in the family

AUSTIN (AP) — Members of the Texas Legislature have been using political funds to pay their spouses, children and other relatives for such services as office work, consulting and catering.
One senator even paid rent to his wife for a home in Austin, a newspaper reports.

Although state law prohibits legislators from profiting personally from their political donations, it doesn't cover relatives.
The Austin American-Statesman said critics complain that the result is a double standard, with lawmakers prohibiting nepotism in state government agencies while following a different set of rules in spending contributions from their political backers.

"If you have some old boy or old girl down here who pays some relative just to pass through money to themselves, then that's one thing — and that ought to be stopped," said Sen. John Whitmire, D-Houston, who spent $9,000 in political funds last year to lease an Austin duplex from his wife.

"But if someone is paying relatives for legitimate services, in a campaign or for rent or whatever, so what? We've got to pay somebody. Why not someone we're related to?" Whitmire asked.
That opinion is shared by several lawmakers, according to the newspaper's review of state records. Among its findings:

- In the past year, using his political account, Rep. Paul Colbert, D-Houston, paid his wife $15,200 for consulting work and reimbursement of expenses.

Sharon Colbert is a political consultant by profession and works for him at a much lower rate than other clients, Rep. Colbert said. "If I couldn't do that, it would cost me more money — and that works against poor folks trying to serve up here," he said.

- When Rep. Al Luna, D-Houston, needed printing work done in 1988, he went to his father's Apollo Printing shop. Between April and December, records showed, he spent more than $10,000 there.

In doing so, Luna said, he got a discount as was able to stretch his campaign budget further. "What's the problem with that?" asked Luna, who said he himself sometimes works in the print shop.

- Campaign spending for Rep. Eddie Luna D-Brownville, was a family affair. Since June, Lucio paid his brother, Joe, a musician, more than $2,700 to entertain at political functions.

Also with campaign funds, Rep. Lucio leased cousin's restaurant for a meeting and paid him to cook at a reception. He paid another cousin a brother-in-law for campaign work. The brother also paid his mother, Josefa, $150 to help for a reception.

"I had to hire somebody — why not family? — just covering their expenses. They should have to do it for free," Lucio said.

- In his 1988 campaign, Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, spent more than $4,500 in political funds to pay three of his daughters for campaign work. One got $2,400.

Barrientos said he paid his daughters the same as other campaign workers.

Grand jury deliberates charges against man who shot murderer

DALLAS (AP) — A grand jury Monday began deciding whether an Irving man should face charges in the shooting death of another man who had gunned down a woman in a shopping mall parking lot.

Todd Allan Broom, 25, told police he did not mean to kill Eddie Edwards, 41, earlier this month, but fired at Edwards to stop him.

Edwards killed his ex-girlfriend, Demetria Yvonne Taylor, 28, in the Irving Mall parking lot March 12. Police declined to charge Broom after interviewing him, but referred the case to a grand jury. The grand jury will not make its decision public until at least Wednesday, grand jury secretary Dolly Jordan said.

A prosecutor's office spokesman said it is standard for grand juries to withhold making their decisions public until the next time they meet. This grand jury meets Mondays and Wednesdays.

The shootings occurred March 12, but Broom fled the scene and turned himself in to police two days later. He told reporters he left because he was afraid he would be treated as a criminal.

"I don't consider myself any sort of vigilante," Broom said at a press conference three days after the

Suspect claims police searched locked office

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas police officials are taking issue with an attorney's suggestion that a murder suspect's office was ransacked by officers with a search warrant who found the office locked.

Dana McIntosh, who has been charged with investigation of murder in the March 19 stabbing death of his wife, said he found the office ransacked during the weekend. He said financial records were stolen and pictures of his wife and children were strewn across his desk.

McIntosh's attorney, Robert Hinton, speculated that the burglary may have in fact been police searching McIntosh's office.

"I don't know yet if this was a police search warrant," Hinton said. But Deputy Chief Ray Hawkins said no search warrants were executed at the office.
