Journalist

House coffee commercial on television.
Ellerbe said that after starting her production company in 1986, Lucky Duck encountered financial problems, and rather than fire any of the personnel she decided to raise the funds needed by appearing in the commercial.
Although she received much criticism from her fellow journalists and many devastating letters, Ellerbe said, she does not regret her decision to keep her company alive.
Ellerbe and Lucky Duck Productions, in conjunction with Turner Broadcasting, are producing what Ellerbe called a "Sesame Street for grown-ups" in an attempt to teach adults to read.
Ellerbe said her motivation for this program stems from the fact that one in every five adults in the United States is illiterate, and she said television is partly to blame.
Bryan Mayor Marvin P. Tate presented Ellerbe with a live duckling which represents Ellerbe's production company. Ellerbe also was presented with a key to the city, as well as an honorary membership to the Friends of the Sterling C. Evans Library.
At the end of Ellerbe's presentation, she relinquished her trade mark, "and so it goes," to rouse the audience with her final words: "Gig 'em."

Inmate: death penalty doesn't work

RICHMOND (AP) — Roger Leroy "Animal" DeGarmo, who dared the state to execute him for the slaying of a 20-year-old Houston woman, said he's "still alive and laughing" at a system that has kept him on death row for 10 years.
"I'm not laughing out of a morbid sense of humor," DeGarmo, 35, said from death row. "I'm laughing because you people are so damn gullible. It's obvious the death penalty's not working in Texas."
DeGarmo, a former California mechanic, was sentenced to death for the Jan. 8, 1979, kidnap-slaying of Kimberly Ann Strickler, a medical technician.
While he confessed to the slaying on the witness stand and threatened to kill his jurors if they did not sentence him to death, DeGarmo now is appealing his conviction and sentence.

But he and Strickler's parents say the system doesn't work.
"There's no logical reason why a person with the death penalty should be alive after eight years. I've been here 10 years flat," DeGarmo told the Houston Chronicle. "Are you going to pay for my existence for another 10 years?"
"If an open and shut case is this difficult, what happens to the really complicated ones?" asked Shirley Parish, 56, the victim's mother.
DeGarmo is seeking a new trial based on alleged deals former Fort Bend County prosecutors made with his accomplice, Helen Leydalia Mejia, 32.
DeGarmo and Mejia were accused of kidnapping Strickler while attempting to steal her car. She was shot in the head as she lay bound in the trunk of her car.

Architecture

The students have been divided into three groups. Each group is responsible for a zone within the Heights.
Tim McLaughlin, a senior environmental design major from Longview, is developing a design for a zone called the warehouse district, at Shepherd Drive and 22nd Street within the Heights. He said working with the people in the community is a valuable experience, and he hopes to change some minds about future architecture in the area.
"It's good to get concrete reaction from the community," McLaughlin said. "They tell you exactly what they expect their neighborhood to look like."
"But what I'm trying to do with my design is to expand the boundaries and give them new ideas about what they can do with the area. It's more persuasive architecture, to show them what could be, not just what is."
Steve Daniels, a senior environmental design major from New Boston, said working on this project helps students look at a large area instead of a single building.
"In this project we deal with urban design in a larger context than just an individual house," he said. "We're also developing a long-range plan. This is a project for the Heights community as a whole. What we're doing is important to the community."

with Angela Smith, director of the Heights Main Street project, overseeing the restoration and redevelopment plans.
Troegel said the students' ideas will be taken into account and a "hybrid" plan using different student ideas will then be drawn up.
"Professor Ekroth is really providing a valuable and exciting program for us," Troegel said. "His students have come up with some great ideas. They are helping create a vision of the Heights area."
