Bentsen says location, weather, community make Kingsville 'ideal' choice for relocation of Panama intelligence command

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army is considering moving units from an Army intelligence command in Panama to one of about four sites nationwide, including the Kingsville Naval Air Station in South Texas, congressional and military officials said Wednesday.

According to Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, the move could ultimately involve the relocation of 4,000 personnel to the base south of Corpus Christi.

Base spokesman Lt. Bob Thiele said Army officials were in Kingsville last week to inspect the air station's facilities and were expected to return for a second visit within the next couple of weeks.

The naval station is one of about four being considered for units of the Army Intelligence and Security Command (INSCOM) from Panama, Thiele said.

An Army spokesman in Washington, Maj. David Georgi, said however that the search for a site for a unit or units of INSCOM was in the initial stages and has "not focused on any particular area or location."

He said that "initiatives" were under way within the Army to identify potential relocation sites within the continental United States in preparation for eventual relocations of Army units required by implementation of the Panama Canal Treaty.

"INSCOM headquarters recently moved into new facilities at Fort Belvoir, Va., and is not relocating," he said.

In a letter Wednesday to Army Secretary Michael P.W. Stone, Bentsen said Kingsville would provide the "ideal location" for the intelligence units.

"It combines a first-class military facility with excellent location, superb weather for operations, and a community that has always welcomed the military warmly," Bentsen said. "The quality of life could not be better."

Bentsen told Stone that the local community also would "work overtime" to help in the relocation.

A decision could be made within the next several weeks, Bentsen said.

Jazz singer Vaughan dies of cancer at age 66

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Legendary jazz singer Sarah Vaughan, the "Divine One" renowned for her unusual range and flowing style peppered with flavors of be-bop and scat, died of cancer eight days after her 66th birthday.

Harold Levy, her manager and friend, said she died late Tuesday of lung cancer at her home in the Hidden Hills area of the west San Fernando Valley. She had been ill for nearly a year and was released from Cedars-Sinai Medical Center hours before her death.

"Sarah Vaughan was among the most powerful, influential and soulful voices of all time, a perfectionist with an astonishing vocal range and a genius for conveying emotion through her music," said Quincy Jones, who first worked with Vaughan in 1957 as the arranger on "Misty."

Some of her other memorable songs included "Broken-Hearted Melody," "Send in the Clowns" and "If You Could See Me Now."

Vaughan's voice, over which she had phenomenal control, had lovely tone and was true in pitch. She had a mastery of scat singing, improvising, swinging and phrasing.

Texas farmers may lose citrus crop insurance

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of jobs in the Texas citrus industry could be lost if the Agriculture Department fails to reassure farmers and bankers that it will continue to back federal crop insurance policies, a trade official warned Congress.

Texas citrus farmers, struggling to recover from a December freeze that caused millions of dollars in crop losses, are the first to receive warnings from the federal government that the next crop insurance policies they buy may not be honored if disaster strikes again.

In a recent notice in the Federal Register, the U.S. Agriculture Department warned that it would begin issuing notices that insurance policies for 1991 crops would be subject to congressional appropriations.

The notices were to go out before various deadlines for farmers to purchase insurance on different crops. Texas citrus growers must purchase crop insurance by June 1, while the closing date for wheat policies is Sept. 30, according to Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

Senators, House members and trade officials say that while crop insurance policies have always been "technically" subject to congressional appropriations, USDA's plans set off a "shock wave" through rural America. The Bush administration is recommending that the crop insurance program be cancelled next year.

"This has caused havoc all over the place, including some companies cancelling some policies," said Rep. Kika de la Garza, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee. In the meantime, however, Texas citrus growers and bankers are in the process of deciding whether to replant acreage killed by the freeze, said Ray Prewett, executive vice president of the Texas Citrus Mutual trade association and president of Valley Ag Insurance Services Inc.

"The bankers are saying loud and clear that without the availability of tree insurance they are not going to continue financing citrus growers," Prewett told the House Agriculture subcommittee on conservation, credit and rural development at a hearing Tuesday.

"Planting citrus is also not a one-year commitment but a long-term commitment and growers and their bankers simply must know if they can count on the continued availability of the citrus tree insurance,"

Prewett said.

Prewett warned that if tree insurance policies are cancelled, "growers won't replant and some 5,000 people will have the difficult task of finding employment in another industry for which they may have limited skills."

About 5,000 people were laid off as a result of the December freeze, he said.

Prewett said Wednesday that he was optimistic, however, that USDA would resolve the issue within the next few days and that insurers would go ahead and write policies on the next citrus crop.
