Bodies from Scandinavian Star ferry removed despite deadly smoke, flames Ag

LYSEKIL, Sweden (AP) - Exhausted firefighters deck. Most victims were asphyxiated but some v braved metal-melting heat and poisonous smoke Sun-day to begin removing the bodies of about 150 victims from the Scandinavian Star ferry, which burned for a second day.

Firefighters struggled to reach cabins where victims burned to death or suffocated in the suspicious blaze, which began before dawn Saturday while the ship was in the North Sea carrying about 500 tourists and crew-members on an overnight trip from Norway to Denmark

The heat was so intense Sunday that it melted aluminum aboard the bridge of the Danish-owned ship. Fire-fighters in masks and breathing equipment fought through one corridor "until their gear started to burn," fire consultant Olle Wennstrom said. One firefighter was slightly injured, he said.

Firefighters were seen leaving the ship in tears. Each team underwent psychological care after being re-lieved, officials said.

The fire spread early Sunday from the gutted middle section to the captain's bridge a few hours after the blackened ship was towed into port. Officials with VR-DANO Line, the company in Co-penhagen that owns and operates the Bahamianflagged ship, say the blaze was arson-caused, citing two

District Police Chief Roar Onso, revising earlier figures, said 345 people survived the fire on the ship that was headed from Oslo to Frederikshavn. Ferry captain Hugo Larsen told police of 395 passengers and 98 crewmen. If his figure is correct, 148 people died, Osno said
