Phone operator service to aid deaf, speech-impaired callers

AUSTIN (AP) — A Kansas-based affiliate of U.S. Sprint is expected next month to begin hiring as many as 100 people in Austin to run the state's first telephone operator service for the deaf and speech-impaired.

Sprint Services, an Overland Park, Kan., firm that provides telephone operator services to U.S. Sprint and other long-distance carriers, was awarded the contract by the Texas Public Utility Commission in March.

Under the contract, valued by the PUC at $5.3 million for the first year, Sprint will set up and operate the first statewide service to relay telephone messages to and from people with hearing or speech disabilities.

Currently, telephone communications in Texas for people who cannot hear or speak are limited to a device for the deaf, called a TDD.

The device, which resembles a scaled-down typewriter, enables the user to type messages based on sign language to other people with TDDs. The typed information is sent out over telephone lines and displayed on the receiver's machine.

The system only works between people who have TDDs, rendering most of the state's telephones off limits to deaf and hearing-impaired people.

By using the Sprint-run center, callers will be able to dial a toll-free number and reach an operator trained in the use of TDDs and American Sign Language, according to the Austin American-Statesman.

The operator will dial the number sought by the deaf user and verbally relay the typed messages.

Similarly, hearing and speaking callers who wish to reach a TDD user will go through the center, where an operator will translate the message into type and send it to a receiving machine.

The cost of the service will be the same as a traditional phone call, the newspaper said.

Pat Myers, a Sprint account representative, said the Texas center, one of about a dozen in the United States, will open Sept. 1.

Based on a Texas deaf population of about 640,000, officials say the center will be equipped to handle 175,000 calls a month.

Myers said the company plans to hire 100 people, but that number may grow, depending on the number and duration of calls.

The operation will be funded by a surcharge provided by local and long-distance telephone companies, which may pass the cost of the surcharge to customers.

Discriminate

H. Mobley early this summer.

The committee, established June by Mobley, emphasizes developing the educational process, heightening awareness, Riley said.

"We want to educate people and do what we can to make the diverse campus where everyone feels comfortable and where we appreciate the cultures and where we have come from," she said.

Individuals who believe they have experienced harassment or discrimination are encouraged to contact the appropriate office. The Student Affairs office of Student Services handles student complaints, the dean of faculty tends to faculty complaints and the Human Resources Department handles staff discrimination problems.

Two more hearings are scheduled for 11:30 a.m. Thursday and Tuesday in 504 Rudder.
