Japanese pimps advertise in phone booths

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese pimps can't advertise in the yellow pages, they've settled for the next best thing — telephone booths.

Call girl stickers, generally those of a playing card, advertise numbers for "telephone clubs."

Because the clubs are ostracized, dating services, police are pressed to stop them.

Near a commuter train station, one residential Tokyo area, dozens of ads cover the interior of phone booths.

One sticker, featuring the photo of a model from a popular shampoo commercial, offered an evening adventure, "70 minutes for 200 yen" ($133).

Other stickers boast of specialties — widows, secretaries, school housewives.

"We tear them down, and the just put them right up again," says Kazumasa Miyazaki, a spokesman for Nippon Telegraph and Telephone, Japan's main phone company.

He says an NTT branch office in Chiba, east of Tokyo, tried to fight by coating the booths with a resin through film soaked in a glue-resistant chemical.

Although the film had some success, stickers were pasted on phones or replaced by conventional handbills.

Miyazaki acknowledges that NTT is on the losing side of the sticky war.

Prostitution and pimping are illegal in Japan and pasting the stickers is a misdemeanor.

But the country has long had a booming sex industry which enjoys a relatively hospitable atmosphere.
