Tom Murray, associate director of student affairs at A&M, said the Census Bureau did not publicize the census adequately to dorm students.

"We asked for some posters and. some pretty good publicity to accompany the forms," Murray said. "And all they provided were a couple of notes saying, 'Please return to your residence director by such-and-such date.' So I don't think the publicity was as good as it could have been."

Basmann, who is dealing only with dorm students, cadets, athletes and members of fraternities or sororities at A&M, said little can be done to force students to complete and return the forms.

"Well, we'd like to avoid that," Basmann said. "It's a very inefficient way, considering that we can't get into most of those places without advance notice and keys."

Basmann said Census Bureau workers, many of whom are employed only temporarily, will work through next week in an attempt to contact students who have not completed the census.

She said all students should complete a census form because statistics derived from the census can influence funds received by local government bodies.

"This makes more money for Texas A&M because they use these figures when they work on grants," she said. "And (it provides) more money for the community for roads and streets and things, and they use them to develop housing projec-
