Sheriff's testimony casts doubt on claim of self-defense in trial

TYLER (AP) — Loyal Garner Jr. was being held in a detoxification cell without furniture or anything to use as a weapon when he was beaten by lawmen in Hemphill, a sheriff testified Thursday in the murder trial of the three former officers.
 Sabine County Sheriff Blane Greer said Garner and his friends, Alton Maxie and Johnnie Maxie, were being kept in an empty cell after being arrested for drunken driving on Christmas Eve 1987.
 Attorneys for the defendants — former Hemphill Police Chief Thomas Ladner and former Sabine County sheriff's deputies James "Bo" Hyden and Billy Ray Horton — say the men beat Garner in self-defense after he became violent.
 The three were acquitted in an earlier trial of violating Garner's civil rights. Garner was black; the defendants are white.
 Greer said Garner had no access to weapons in the 8-by-17 foot detoxification cell.
 "There's nothing in there for them to get a hold of or pick up, is there?" Jack Skeen, Smith County District Attorney, asked Greer.

 "No, sir," the sheriff responded.
 Greer said he returned to Hemphill from a trip the night Garner and the Maxie brothers were arrested. But he was not called to the department that night, and when he arrived about 8:15 the next morning, an ambulance had been called for Garner, Greer said.
 Garner was taken to a hospital in Tyler, where he died the next day from head injuries he suffered in the beating.
 Greer said he called Texas Ranger Roscoe Davis to investigate the incident since it involved two of his partners.
 Also Thursday, the three-man, nine-woman jury was shown the slapjack Ladner said during the civil rights trial that he used to hit Garner in the head. A slapjack is a foot-long device with a handle and middle spring. The striking end is a two-inch wide weighted strip of leather.

Jury finds boy, 13, fit to stand trial

LOCKHART (AP) — A Caldwell County jury decided a 13-year-old boy is competent to stand trial for the March 8 slayings of his parents at their home.
 The eight-woman, four-man jury took about 30 minutes Wednesday to find the teen-ager fit to help in his defense and able to understand the legal proceedings.
 Presiding juror Mary Kochran said the jury gave "a lot of weight" to the testimony of a court-appointed psychiatrist who said the youth was competent.
 After two 90-minute sessions with the youth, Austin psychiatrist David Caldwell said Tuesday the boy understands his circumstances.
 The boy is on trial for the March 8 shootings of his parents.
 Caldwell said the youth suffered from some depression, but said it is not severe enough to cause hallucinations.
 Earlier testimony by the boy's grandmother and his two attorneys said the boy on one occasion told of an out-of-body experience the night of his parents' death.
 Attorney Kyle Maysel testified Tuesday that the youth said he had seen himself floating and telling his other self not to kill his parents.
 The youth was mixed up about some events the night of the shooting, Caldwell said, but in general was "cohesive and coherent" during their discussions.
 If convicted, the youth could face a 30-year sentence in Texas Youth Commission facilities and state prison.

Officer back on duty after heart transplant

VICTORIA (AP) — For Eddie Locke, going back to work as a policeman was something he was determined to do, even though the odds were stacked high against him.
 You might say he had his heart set on it.
 Roughly nine months after a heart transplant, he is working his way back to full-time duty as a patrolman.
 It's likely he'll be the first heart transplant patient to do that.
 Locke fulfilled a large part of his goal on March 1, when he returned as a police officer with the Victoria Police Department.
 The rest should be accomplished by April 27 when he will take to the streets for the first time in almost four years.
 Locke has been in an abbreviated field officers training program, becoming reacquainted with the routine of police work. He is paired with an active patrol officer.
 Locke, who was 40 on March 27, 1989, at Houston's Methodist Hospital. He had waited since May 1988 for the new heart, which came from a 15-year-old killed in a motorcycle accident in Houston.
 In May 1984, Locke was diagnosed as having inflammatory cardiomyopathy. Four years later, his heart's condition had deteriorated to the point that his doctors determined a transplant was necessary to save his life.
 He had left street duty for a desk job in the police department, and by November 1988 had to leave work altogether a year and a half after his doctors had recommended. But Locke was determined to make it back to the street patrol.
 Locke is the first police officer his doctors know of who has undergone a heart transplant and returned to active street duty.
 Police Chief Jeryl Talley said when Locke was diagnosed as 100 percent disabled, the department agreed to hold his position open for his return.
 After he had been gone more than a year, Talley asked to have the budgeted position filled, still with the understanding that when Locke was ready to come back, he would have a job.
 "It is always good to see someone come out of a situation like Eddie was in," Talley said. "We welcome him back. It is always good to get a proven member of the department back. He is a valued employee."
 Before he could make his comeback, Locke's doctors in Houston had to sign a release indicating there were no restrictions on his activities.
 Since March 1, Locke has been busy brushing up on departmental changes and new laws.
