Richards' politics come under attack

Retired Army colonel establishes veterans anti-flag burning group

AUSTIN (AP) — The ground force commander in the aborted 1980 Iran hostage rescue attempt fired a political shot Wednesday at Democratic gubernatorial candidate Ann Richards while announcing the formation of a veterans group against burning the United States flag.

Retired Army Col. Charlie Beckwith of Austin said Veterans for a Constitutional Flag Amendment only has six or seven members, but added, "I suspect it's going to grow after today.

Noting that Thursday is Flag Day, Beckwith opened a news conference by having everyone stand to pledge allegiance to a U.S. flag held by another veteran, Joe Lopez of Austin.
"We've tried the other courses of action to push something through and the Supreme Court has ruled that it won't wash, so we're at the point now where we've got to amend the Constitution," Beckwith said.

Post: Bush officials use seed money for bank

HOUSTON (AP) - Two former as one of 12 national banks under political operatives for President Bush used seed money from a Louisiana organized crime figure who was instrumental in the failure of at least 12 savings loans and opened a small bank three blocks from the White House, the Houston Post reported in a copyright story.

The newspaper identified the two men as Stefan Halper and Harvey D. McLean Jr. and said the bank was Palmer National Bank. Halper had ties to the nation's intelligence community and McLean had a long association with Herman K. Beebe Sr., who had a long association with a key organized crime figure, the newspaper reported.

The Post reported Sunday that although they had no banking experience, they set out to create a special kind of bank in the nation's capital.

Although Palmer National remains solvent and has not been the target of any known criminal investigations, its history provides direct evidence of a connection between organized crime and the intelligence community in the operation of a federally insured financial institution.

The Houston newspaper has reported since February on evidence pointing to a possible link between organized crime and the CIA in the failure of 25 financial institutions, whose demise could eventually cost taxpayers $75 billion.

The newspaper has learned that the bank was listed on a 1985 report by the Comptroller of the Currency the bank

The newspaper's investigation also revealed: • Palmer National lent money to individuals and organizations that were involved in covert aid to the Ni-

 Palmer National co-founder Stefan Halper helped set up North's legal defense fund. Halper's name appears in the final entry of North's White House journal under the heading "Legal Defense Fund."
