Teachers

The dilemma was summed up by another teacher who wrote, "I can love and teach children, but I can't correct all of society's ills by myself."

Many others complained about the career ladder and working long hours with inadequate compensa tion.

The career ladder is the method used to rate teachers through periodic evaluations and to encourage them to pursue higher education.

The study also found:

• Among teachers thinking about quitting, only 2 percent cited students' discipline, motivation and academics as a factor this year, down demics as a factor this year, down from a high of 14 percent 10 years

Female teachers still greatly outnumber their male counterparts, 85 percent to 15 percent this year. In 1980, the ratio was 80 percent to 20 percent.

• Forty-two percent of teachers teach in urban areas, 40 percent in suburban areas and 18 percent in rural areas.

• Three of four teachers agree with the "No Pass, No Play" rule barring student athletes from competition unless they meet minimum grade requirements. In 1986, only half agreed with the policy.

• Only 50 percent of teachers want to retain the career ladder.

The survey found the average Texas teacher is a 43-year-o'd woman with a bachelor's degree, teaches elementary school in an urban area, has 15 years experience and is married to a spouse who works.

Lawsuit

Amendment such as Title VII. Lamoreux, who has contested her tenure denial since 1987, filed a lawsuit in a Houston federal court March 2 naming as defendants Texas A&M, the College of Science, the Department of Biology, President William Mobley, Associate Provost and Dean of Faculties Dr. Clinvost and Dean of Faculties Dr. Clinton Phillips, Dean of Science Dr. John Fackler, Biology Department Head Dr. Timothy Hall and Professor of Biology Dr. Michael Kemp. Following their own hearings, both the Tenure Advisory and Academic Production Proceedings of Science Production Produc demic Freedom, Responsibility and Tenure Committees strongly recommended she receive tenure last year. George Wharton, A&M Director of Affirmative Action and Chancellor for Human Resources and Assistant General Counsel Scott Kelly said the case was not a matter for discussion since it was in litigation.

Lamoreux was taken off the University payroll in June. She now tu-tors biology students in her off-campus office and plans to stay in the area.

"It's my home," Lamoreux said.
