Supreme Court absolves children from facing their accused abusers

WASHINGTON (AP) — People charged with child abuse have no guaranteed right to face-to-face confrontations with their young accusers if the children would suffer emotional trauma as a result, the Supreme Court ruled Wednesday.

In a pair of 5-4 rulings, the court gave tacit approval to the constitutionality of measures taken by many states to spare children from such potentially traumatic confrontations.

Those measures include the use of videotaped testimony, testimony by one-way closed circuit television and even testimony by doctors and others who interviewed alleged abuse victims.

"A state's interest in the physical and psychological well-being of child-abuse victims may be sufficiently important to outweigh, at least in some cases, a defendant's right to face his or her accusers in court," Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote for the court.

Concluding its 1989-90 term, the court also upheld federal policies that favor minorities in awarding broadcast licenses, a major victory for affirmative action.

By a 5-4 vote, the justices said preferential Federal Communications Commission policies do not discriminate unlawfully against whites. The court did not address the issue of women's rights, but FCC affirmative action policies treat women and ethnic minorities almost identically.

In a case from Florida, the court said the commission could give special, favorable consideration to minorities in awarding a television station license. And in a case from Connecticut, the court upheld the commission's "distress-sale" policy, which allows a broadcaster faced with the loss of his license to sell to a

Highest court rules in favor of affirmative action quotas for granting broadcast licenses

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court said Wednesday the federal government may favor minorities in awarding broadcast licenses, a surprising victory for affirmative action from a court that has recently trimmed racial preferences.

The justices, voting 5-4, ruled that Federal Communications Commission policies designed to bring diversity to the nation's airwaves do not violate the rights of white people.

The decision delighted stunned proponents of affirmative action.

"Scrape me off the floor," said Andrew Jay Schwartzman of the Media Access Project, a coalition of groups that had urged the court to uphold the FCC policies. "The Supreme Court has opened the door of opportunity for America's minorities."

Schwartzman said the ruling also lets the FCC continue its policy of giving preferential treatment to women seeking broadcast licenses.

Although the court did not address the issue of women's rights, FCC affirmative action policies treat women and minorities almost identically. Throughout the history of the two cases ruled on Wednesday, the FCC has argued that women's rights were at issue.

The ruling also removes a threat to other federal affirmative action programs, including those adopted by the Transportation and Defense Departments and by the Small Business Administration.

In Wednesday's ruling, Justice William J. Brennan wrote for the court that congressional approval of racial preferences shields such programs from the kind of challenge that could invalidate similar state and city plans.

Bush administration officials are disturbed by provisions of the bill they say could force businesses to adopt hiring quotas.

minority-owned business at 75 percent of the market value.

In other rulings, the court:

- Limited the power of environmentalists to sue in federal court to prevent the opening of federal lands to commercial development.
- Upheld Arizona's death penalty law in a decision that also removes a constitutional shadow from similar laws in Idaho and Montana.

- Ruled in a Maryland case that most of the nation's post offices may ban all soliciting on their property.

The child-abuse decisions, in cases from Maryland and Idaho, are expected to make it easier to prosecute people on such charges.

The number of cases is growing. More than 2.2 million child-abuse reports were filed in 1988, according to the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse.

"This is a victory for children," Joyce Strom of the Child Welfare League of America said after learning of the rulings. "This is a step in the right direction for strengthening a judicial system to protect children and acknowledging their needs."

However, the decisions were not a total victory for the states nor a defeat for the Constitution's 14th Amendment, which says that "no criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right ... to be confronted with all witnesses against him."

Writing for the court in the Maryland case, O'Connor said "That the face-to-face confrontation requirement is not absolute does, of course, mean that it may easily be dispensed with."

She added: "A defendant's right ... may be satisfied ... only where denial of such confrontation is necessary to further an important public policy and only where the reliability of the testimony is otherwise assured."

O'Connor said trial judges should shield children from such confrontations only when substantial emotional trauma — not mere nervousness or reluctance — would result.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Byron R. White, Harry A. Blackmun and Anthony M. Kennedy joined O'Connor.

Justices Antonin Scalia, William Brennan, Thurgood Marshall and John Paul Stevens dissented.

Poll: Americans saw taxes coming

Associated Press

President Bush's flip-flop on his hallmark campaign pledge of "no new taxes" is generating more heat than a summer hot spell in Death Valley.

Taxes and the hot air of broken political promises provided a combustible mix for people in the street, radio talk show callers and headline writers. It didn't play well in Peoria either.

"I think all politicians have some little white lies in them," said Peter Sienkowski, 52, a Dallas Republican.

WABC Talk Radio in New York City played Bush's oft-repeated campaign pledge with his Tuesday statement that reducing the federal deficit would need "tax revenue increases." The about-face prompted a torrent of calls.

"How many times have we heard that phrase, 'read my lips?'" wondered Paulette Pettit of WABC.

Abortion

They may find somebody to do a non-medical abortion or they may go to Mexico where illegal abortions are easily obtained," she said. "This is very dangerous. Around 800 women die a month due to illegal abortions in Mexico."

Texas presently does not have a law requiring parental notification for a girl to obtain an abortion.

Both groups, however, believe this certainly will be an issue during January's legislative session in Austin.

Both groups agreed young women need to take a stand when the issue arises in the state's Capitol.

"A pre-born child desperately needs an advocate, and minors can benefit from wise and compassionate counsel," Redfield said. "Perhaps many parents will serve in these capacities."

Neney, however, encourages young women to be well-informed and sensitive to the abortion issue when it comes time for the Legislature to decide whether to act on the Supreme Court's decision.
