Bar robbers leave man dead

DALLAS (AP) — Police arrested two teen-agers and searched for three others suspected of robbing 26 patrons at a piano bar, a heist that left one man dead when he confronted the bandits, thinking they were shooting blanks.

Kirk Sheldon Lee, 18, of Dallas, was charged with capital murder and aggravated robbery Sunday afternoon. He was arrested at his home Friday night.

A 16-year-old boy, whose name wasn't disclosed because he is a juvenile, turned himself in Sunday night, police said. The boy was charged with capital murder.

Police issued murder warrants for three others, who range in age from 15 to 25. Lee's bail was set at $25,000 for the robbery charge. No bail was set on the murder charge. The 16-year-old was being held at a juvenile detention center.

woman as dean. Dr. Patricia Alexander, an associate professor in the College of Education and chairwoman of the Status of Women Committee, said she was pleased about the appointment and believes Stallings will move the college forward.

"But I'm also excited about it because she is the first role model in an administrative position," Alexander said. "It's time. It sends the right message out about Texas A&M and its willingness to put women in key roles in the University."

Other female faculty members also were pleased with the appointment, but still feel women are highly underrepresented in positions of leadership.

"I wish women would be appointed to administrative positions in non-traditional areas, like the hard sciences," said Dr. Mary Zey, head of the Department of Sociology.

Zey, the lone woman department head at A&M, also said she was concerned that the few women in administrative positions were just tokens.

"I would like to see a fuller representation of women in the University," she said.

Stallings earned a bachelor of science degree in elementary and science education from Ball State University and a Ph.D. in education and child development in 1970 from Stanford University.

After earning her doctorate, she was on staff at the Stanford Research Institute for 10 years before establishing her own research facility, the Stallings Teacher and Learning Institute.

She operated that research group until 1983 when she joined the faculty at Vanderbilt University and became director of the Peabody Center for Effective Teaching there. She joined UH in 1986.

A&M President Dr. William Mobley, in recommending Stallings to the Board, said she is interested in the formation of a theory of effective schooling and translation of research findings into information for teachers and administrators.

Another goal of Stallings is the development of a model for helping teachers learn to teach in inner-city schools, he said.

Stallings serves on the editorial boards of several professional journals, including the Journal of Research in Childhood Education, Journal of Educational Psychology, and Teacher and Teacher Education.

She belongs to the American Educational Research Association, American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education and the Association of Teacher Educators.

Faculty

the drawbacks mainly are suffered by students who might need help from instructors with no office hours.

Valdez, who also is a lecturer in the Department of Modern Languages at A&M, said he has no problem with the pay because he teaches at Blinn to earn extra money.

Hill said part-time instructors are paid $1,800 per three-hour course during fall or spring semesters.

During the summer, instructors are paid $1,000 per three-hour class during six weeks, instead of sixteen weeks.

Full-time instructors at Blinn earn an average yearly salary of $24,500. Hill said all Blinn instructors are paid competitive salaries. He said he has a waiting list of instructors who want to teach part-time at Blinn.

Hill also emphasized that while most A&M instructors are expected to teach, research or publish and involve themselves in community service, Blinn teachers can concentrate on service and teaching aspects of their job.

The TFA report recommended to the Higher Education Coordinating Board that all part-time faculty be paid on a pro-rata basis.

Pro-rata means that given a person's qualifications and experience, each part-time faculty member should make a percentage based on work load of what an equivalent full-time faculty member would earn.

Under this formula, an instructor teaching eight hours would receive 75 percent of the benefits received by a full-time instructor.

TFA maintains that pro-rata salary would discourage hiring part-time faculty in the place of full-time faculty, except where the hiring of part-time faculty is required for educational reasons.

Those reasons include:

- Providing students with instruction by practicing professionals.
- Providing special expertise otherwise unavailable.
- Meeting unexpected student demand.
- Budgetary constraints.
- Replacing faculty on leave.
- Staffing night classes.

Dr. Christine Maitland, a higher education specialist with the National Education Association, reported to the HECB that as the number of part-time students in higher education grew, so did the number of part-time faculty.

TFA's State Office Coordinator Judy Horton said part-time instructors deserve better treatment than people who work at other part-time jobs because educators are professionals.

"If you're teaching at the college level, you have arrived professionally and are entitled to the benefits that go with that," Horton said.

money because they are health science centers financially separate from their universities.

Students at A&M's small medical school study here for two years before doing clinical work at the Olin E. Teague Veterans Center and the Scott and White Memorial Hospital in Temple and Darnall Army Community Hospital in Fort Hood.

Rankin said he hopes the medical school becomes a health science center during the next Legislative session, which begins in January 1991.

In other business Friday, the Board:

- Authorized the establishment of a Center for Biotechnology Policy and Ethics in the College of Liberal Arts. The center will explore ethical and policy issues associated with scientific and technological develop-opment and provide consulting to A&M researchers.

The center will collaborate with the Institute of Biosciences and Technology in Houston.

- Authorized the establishment of the Center for Human Resource Management in the Department of Business Administration.

- Granted the title of emeritus to Dr. J. Richard Steffy, professor of anthropology; Dr. Norman D. Thomas, associate professor of anthropology; and Dr. Clint Phillips, former dean of faculties and associate provost.

- Authorized the establishment of a program for faculty members whose primary language is not English. The program is a mandate from the Legislature.

- Appropriated $1 million to purchase badly needed equipment for the College of Veterinary Medicine.
