Highway officials travel winding roads

Department funds fail to meet outlined plans

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas will have to cancel or delay $5 billion worth of highway projects over the next 10 years unless it sets aside more money to improve roads, the state Highway Commission chairman said Tuesday. Chairman Robert Dedman of Dallas supports a 10-cent increase in the state's 15-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax to give the Highway Department a cash infusion. The tax increase would raise about $750 million a year for highways, and another $250 million for education, he said. The department hasn't begun deciding what highway projects would be eliminated if funding isn't sufficient, Dedman said. "We're agonizing over what to do," he said. "We have committed to do $5 billion worth of projects for the rest of this century that we don't have the funding now to do."

Inflation has taken a bite out of the department's $2.6 billion annual budget, which comes from state and federal funds, he said. And lawmakers have used some money previously set aside for highways to pay for other state needs. For example, Dedman noted that the Legislature in its scramble to find additional money for schools this summer raised the state fee for moving oversize and overweight items on highways.

That new money will go to education, he said, "but we're the ones that have to go out and fix the potholes and repair the bridges and don't have the funding to do it."

Dedman's proposal to increase the gasoline tax has drawn opposition from candidates for state office. Lawmakers just increased the state sales tax and other taxes for public education.

But Dedman said he didn't think he made a mistake by proposing the tax increase in an election year. And he said he would testify for the increase before the Legislature, which meets in regular session beginning in January.

"The conventional wisdom is that the press and the populace are so illiterate and gullible that politicians can say I'm going to give you the world with a fence around it before an election, but I'm not going to charge you any taxes to do it," he said.

"I really have a lot more faith in the press and the populace than that," he said.

Of the necessary funding, Dedman said, "I really think that the people will realize that the projects are needed and will do something about it."

Highway upgrade offers hope to S. Texas economy

AUSTIN (AP) — South Texans told the state Highway Commission Tuesday to boost their economy by upgrading a highway to four lanes between Corpus Christi and the Mexican border. But Highway Commission Chairman Robert Dedman had little hope that the state would commit state resources to the $138.5 million project to widen State Highway 44 and U.S. Highway 59 to four lanes between Corpus Christi and Laredo.

"You gentlemen have in your hands the economic destiny of an entire region," Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, told the three commissioners.

"There is no question that your case is meritorious," Dedman said, but he said the department already is short about $5 billion for projects it has committed to do over the next 10 years.

Truan called the South Texas project a "must."

"We are not just talking about linking the border to the Coastal Bend," Truan said. "We are instead addressing the linkup between the largest inland port in the United States with the sixth-largest seaport in the land."

Upgrading the highways would link the maquiladora industry on the Texas-Mexico border to the rest of the world via Corpus Christi's port, he said.

The maquiladora industry is composed of companies with plants on each side of the border.

The route currently is four lanes from Corpus Christi to San Diego, and two lanes from San Diego to Laredo. The two roads meet at Freer.

The highway widenings would provide "access to the global economy for the products that are assembled and manufactured in the maquiladoras and by the booming industries of Northern Mexico," Truan said.

Webb County Judge Andres Ramos said 366,000 trucks and trailers crossed through Laredo's port last year, a 77 percent increase in three years. That number is expected to climb to 700,000 in three years, he said.

Corpus Christi Mayor Betty Turner cited increased tourist traffic since her city's recent opening of the Texas State Aquarium. And she said more visitors are expected after the planned opening of a Nueces County dog-racing track in November.

Medical examiner livens up court room

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Dr. Joseph Rupp slumped back in a chair in his cluttered office and contemplated perceptions of his job. "Nothing interests people like death," Rupp said. "They're afraid of it, but they sure are interested in it."

Every day, corpses are wheeled into Rupp's office. As Nueces County medical examiner, he pokes, prods and explores the bodies. He determines a cause and mode of death. When a death is suspicious, he assists law enforcement officers in the investigation.

Rupp handles some 1,200 cases a year. After 20 years, the doctor said, he's about ready to quit. He has plans to retire before the end of this year.

Since he came to the Coastal Bend in 1970, Rupp has earned a reputation as a lively and knowledgeable witness in court, where he can be found poking through holes in a skull to show how a bullet entered or demonstrating on himself how the hands of an attacker could snap a neck.

Douglas Tinker, a local defense attorney, said Rupp's testimony in court can be "devastating" to murder defendants.

"My tactic is not to ask him anything," Tinker said, adding that some defense lawyers make the mistake of allowing Rupp to tell the jury things the defendant would rather they not hear.

"Most of what he does is give his opinion about how someone died," Tinker said. "But if you let him, he'll extend that and give an opinion about how it happened."

An illustration of Tinker's observation came during the defense lawyer's most recent courtroom encounter with Rupp.

In May, Tinker was defending Michael Bryan, accused of killing a man whom Bryan had met in a gay bar.

Tinker successfully objected to having Rupp's comments heard in front of the jury. But the medical examiner testified that the Bryan case matched a pattern of killings where men who do not think they are gay but frequent gay bars wind up killing men who make advances toward them.

The basis of Tinker's defense of Bryan was his client's supposed revulsion to a homosexual advance, which Rupp suggested Bryan welcomed, even encouraged.

Bryan was found guilty of murder and sentenced to 40 years in prison.

Act Now

The University Police Department will celebrate the seventh annual "National Night Out" Tuesday at University Owned Apartments, on University Drive. "National Night Out" is an opportunity for Texas A&M to join thousands of communities across the country in support of safer neighborhoods and to demonstrate success of cooperative crime prevention efforts.

This event encourages residents to turn lights on in their homes, lock the windows and go outside to meet the neighbors.

This year's function will be highlighted by a parade of fire trucks from the Brayton Fireman Training Center. A coloring contest for children will be judged by McDonald's Hamburglar.

Lake plan flooded with debate

National Park Service rangers at Lake Meredith and regional officials say they like Rep. Bill Sarpalus' idea to turn the lake into a national recreation area.

But the agency doesn't.

The Texas Panhandle lake is not a priority with the National Park Service, associate director Denis Galvin told a House panel Tuesday. And Sarpalus' proposal to expand the park "is not embodied in any of the planning documents for Lake Meredith," Galvin said.

He testified before the subcommittee on national parks and public lands of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Sarpalus, D-Amarillo, is seeking $1 million for the lake in the 1991 budget. His bill also orders the government to create a 5-year development plan that includes a visitor center and better facilities, and extends the park service's supervision indefinitely.

The National Park Service has handled the lake under a 1965 agreement with the Bureau of Land Reclamation, which built the lake to provide drinking water to Panhandle communities. But the park service has been free to pull out of the agreement anytime and has done little to develop the lake.

Local park service officials say they've been hampered in what they can do by a lack of money and support from agency leaders, Sarpalus and the community leaders said.

Community leaders who testified before the subcommittee brushed off Galvin's opposition.

"We think it's simply a reaction that might be expected from a bureaucratic agency," said John Williams, manager of the Canadian River Municipal Water Authority which regulates the lake's water level and distribution.

The lake and nearby Alibates National Monument draw 1.5 million visitors a year, but most of them are local residents, said Jack King, president of the First National Bank in Borger and a resident of the lake.

"This is part of our national heritage," King said. "We need to make more people privy to that."

"What is unique about this project is its important historical value," Sarpalus said.

For 11,000 years Pre-Columbian Indians dug flint from the Alibates quarries to make projectile points and tools. Near the lake are 400 locations where scientists have found proof of Indian occupation, Sarpalus said.
