Chronicle claims Williams misused state court rules

HOUSTON (AP) — Republican gubernatorial nominee Clayton W. Williams Jr. has kept many of his business practices and legal troubles secret by reaching out-of-court settlements, bullying opponents and ordering records sealed, according to a published report.

The Houston Chronicle reported Sunday that Williams, a West Texas multimillionaire entrepreneur, has abused lax state court rules to seal business moves and lawsuit manipulations.

The massive amount of litigation involving Williams and his companies has become a central focus of an advertising campaign by his Democratic opponent Ann Richards. Television commercials for her campaign depict Williams as a shady businessman and attacks several of his business practices, including his refusal to make public his income tax returns and the use of junk bonds in the buyout of one of his companies.

Williams was on vacation and not interviewed for the article.

His press secretary, Gordon Hensley, told the Associated Press the practice of sealing legal settlements is routine for businessmen.

"Court records of business suits are sealed so that greedy trial lawyers — who incidentally are among Richards' largest campaign contributors — don't file lawsuits at a late date, attempting to use old allegations to essentially extort a similar settlement payment at a later date," Hensley said Sunday. "This is the practice with business lawsuits and also common with medical malpractice suits."

But Tom Smith, director of Public Citizen, a public interest watchdog group, said voters should be concerned about the practice.

"It should cause Texans a great deal of concern that Williams has an established pattern of sealing court files every time he has an opportunity just to prevent people from taking a look at the inner-workings of his business," Smith said.
