Old track loses race against developers

COLLEYVILLE (AP) — Ross Downs has been the site of horse races since the 1950s, but its last race has been run, and soon it will be transformed into a maze of streets, curbs and upscale homes.
The track owner said he had no choice but to proceed with a housing development after his application for a Class 2 pari-mutuel racetrack was turned down in 1989. Ross Downs closed Sunday.
"We're cussin' and discussin' this day and how sad it is and what they've done to racing in Texas," Donna Tolliver said, who raises horses at The Colony near Lewisville. "Where are we going to go?"
"We're run a lot of horses here, and we're very sad about today," Tolliver told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.
Ernest Owen, who owns the track, had grand visions of Ross Downs becoming one of Texas' first Class 2 pari-mutuel racetracks. After voters approved pari-mutuel betting in 1987, Owen poured thousands of dollars into the track in anticipation of getting a license.

The 114-acre tract — the domain of horse enthusiasts since the 1950s — will give way to development in the Fort Worth suburb.
Ross Owen, Ernest's son for whom the track is named, was in the steward's tower this weekend. Another steward, Jim Beasley, announced the races. The third steward was Ted Pustejovsky.
Nineteen races were on the program, with two to eight horses in each race. Satan Sheet won the first race in a photo finish with Smash Tim.
Claude Reynolds, 70, who lives near the track, said things won't be the same without the track.

Freed hostage wants 'fighting war'

GRAPEVINE (AP) — Hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Kuwait face starvation, and if the State Department won't negotiate their release, "we ought to have a fighting war," says a Texas man who recently was freed.
"I'm saying that the people remaining in the Kuwait embassy might have a fighting chance of being rescued" if American troops attack Iraqi soldiers occupying Kuwait, Lloyd Culbertson of El Paso said.
"The people are starving in that embassy, or they soon will be," Culbertson said Sunday during a lay-over at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport en route to his home.
"My thought is this: would you rather starve to death slowly, or would you rather die with a bullet through the head?" Culbertson said. "Take your choice. That's what I had to do. That's what the rest of them are doing. (Thinking) how will we die? They've all made their peace with the Lord."
He said up to 25 people remained in the embassy.
Culbertson was among 47 Americans released from Kuwait, which was overrun by Iraqi soldiers Aug. 2. They arrived in the U.S. Sunday at Washington-Dulles International

Texan reports on conditions for hostages in U.S. Embassy

Airport aboard an Iraqi jetliner cleared to land only for this homecoming flight.
A U.S. official said 24 women, 11 men and 12 children arrived but declined to identify them, citing privacy laws.
Bobby and Odessa Higgins of Texarkana also were on the plane, shown in a photo with the Rev. Jesse Jackson. Mrs. Higgins suffered a broken hip in a car accident just after the invasion last month. Family members in Texas could not be reached Sunday by the Associated Press.
Culbertson, 76, said hostages in the embassy are stranded inside without fresh water or electrical power and are fast depleting food supplies.
"It's getting bad, very bad — no water, no electricity, no power of any kind," he said. "You couldn't even take a bath. If you used the toilet, you couldn't flush it. You had to go out to the pool and get some water to flush it."

"The people are starving in that embassy, or they soon will be," Culbertson said. "I resent very much that ... our president and secretary of state have gone fishing" during the crisis, he said.
"Let's talk about those economic sanctions," he said. "They are working, but they won't cripple Iraq totally for six to eight months, will they? In the meantime, can't we negotiate?"
Asked if the people left behind feared for their lives, Culbertson said, "Yes, they certainly do."
Culbertson took issue with Iraqi Ambassador Mohamed Sadiq al-Mashat's insistence that hostages were treated well as "guests" of Saddam: "The ambassador from Iraq is dead wrong."
"If it were not for the grace of God and Jesse Jackson, we would not be here. The State Department has not lifted a hand for us," Culbertson said, who told reporters he has taught electronics to the Kuwaiti military for 5½ years.

"I don't understand why we can't negotiate with Saddam Hussein if Jesse Jackson can," he said.
Marjorie Walterscheid of Jacksboro, the wife of another Middle East hostage, met Culbertson at DFW to ask if he had seen her husband Rainard.
"In case he has, I drove the 80 miles," said Mrs. Walterscheid. She said the latest State Department reports indicate her husband, an oil field worker, is being held in a Baghdad hotel.
Culbertson looked at a picture of Walterscheid and said he hadn't seen the man. He hugged Mrs. Walterscheid, who broke into tears.
"God bless you," Culbertson said softly. "I'll say a prayer. I wish I could help you."
Mrs. Walterscheid said later she was glad to have talked to Culbertson, anyway.
"The things I have said about the president being on vacation, things I have said about the State Department — he feels the same way," she said.
But, she disagreed that U.S. forces should invade to rescue Americans.
"I feel like once the shooting starts, those people are no longer going to care ... about our people. No, I don't want any shooting."
