Man pleads guilty, gets 3 life terms

AMARILLO (AP) — Prosecuting attorneys claimed victory after a man accused of shooting a Wichita Falls police officer was sentenced to three consecutive life terms in a plea bargain agreement.

"Not only was it right, but justice was served for Daniel Martin Fowler," District Attorney Barry Macha said Wednesday after a brief hearing.

Fowler, 39, agreed Wednesday to avoid a capital murder trial that already had consumed almost eight weeks of jury selection.

He admitted to the shooting death of police Lt. Walter T. "Tommy" Collins and the wounding of two other officers.

Fowler, who has been in mental hospitals in three states more than 10 times, is a diagnosed paranoid schizophrenic.

Macha said three consecutive life terms meant Fowler will "in effect, get the death penalty in prison." He will have to serve 15 years of each sentence, for a total of 45 years, before he is eligible for parole.

Border mayors hope unity gets attention

EL PASO (AP) — A U.S. diplomat assured officials from U.S. and Mexican border cities Thursday that the region has Washington's attention. But many of the border mayors are hoping for a stronger voice.

"If all the cities on the Mexican and the American side unite, we may be able to solve some of the problems," San Benito Mayor Gilbert Galvan said. "It's a combined effort. They'll listen to us better and work with us better if we are united."

The Border Mayors conference was initiated by El Paso Mayor Suzie Azar and is being sponsored together with Ciudad Juarez, Mexico.

Mayors and representatives from at least 22 cities on both sides of the border are attending the conference to discuss the problems and potential of the nearly 2,000-mile border between the countries.

"It is here on the border, in the daily lives of our citizens, that I see our bilateral relationship in its most concrete and tangible form," U.S. Ambassador to Mexico John D. Negroponte, said.

"Some pressing day-to-day issues are not being addressed in the Border Governors meeting," Mayor Suzie Azar said. "And then we will have new governors in 1991, so it will take a long time to bring those issues to the border governors' agenda."

"If we can become a unified force, I think it makes a difference," she said.

For Ojinaga, Mexico Mayor Jesus Rodriguez Benitez, the mayor's conference is an opportunity to learn from larger border cities and try to bring business to his community across the border from Presidio.

Benitez said small Mexican towns like Ojinaga, which has only one foreign-owned business, need more outside investment.

He said he has seen increased attention paid to relationships between cities on the border.

"Not all the cities on the border have clout," Benitez said. "So we come here to learn from the cities with experience so we can do it on our own later."

Columbus, N.M. Mayor Charles Hudson said his city already has many binational programs, including sending firefighters across the border to help put out blazes and sharing ambulance service.

But Hudson also hopes the conference will help him get the federal government to finish blacktopping a road between Columbus and El Paso.

"We've just got to keep putting our point across," Hudson said. "We've got to create jobs for our children, we don't have many jobs."
