completed one semester at Texas A&M and a have GPR of at least

Additionally, a student must be active in campus or community activities and show qualities of leadership as indicated by positions held in student/community organizations. Applicants must not be on any kind of probation as of Aug. 31. Applications can be obtained from the Commandant's Office, student programs office in the MSC, student activities office in the Pavilion, the first floor of the Blocker Building and the reference/reading room in the Biochemistry/Bioengineering Building.

They also can be picked up in the Sterling C. Evans Library, the dean's office in veterinary medicine and office of the vice president for student services.

Students chosen for Who's Who receive a framed certificate.

Over 300 Americans reach U.S. from Jordan

chartered jet carrying more than 300 weary U.S. evacuees from wartorn Kuwait landed Sunday after a flight from Jordan.

The 747 aircraft, which left Amman early Sunday, arrived at the Charleston International Airport about 6:10 p.m. It was delayed several hours because of an unexpected pains and three children from another family were feeling ill. All four, plus the children's mother, got off the plane in Halifax and were taken to a hospital for care, he said.

getting permission from the publisher or having to pay a royalty because it is considered fair use.

There are four questions, however, to consider when determining if a use is fair: What is the nature of the work? The nature of the use? The amount of work used? The effect of the use on the market value of the work?

But these four questions are criteria for determining fair use, not a definitive answer for printers, said Alfred Sumberg, director of government relations at the American Association of University Presidents and a copyright expert. "Fair use is not defined in the law," Sumberg said. "There are certain criteria presented as to what constitutes fair use, but the result is a gray area.'

Sumberg said Congress intentionally left the fair use section vague in order to let the judicial system make the decisions

Dr. Don Tomlinson, an A&M assistant professor of media law, said fair use is a big exception to the on fair use?" Tomlinson asked. "A page? I doubt it. What about two pages? Or 10? Or 50? Or 200?"

Risher and the Association of American Publishers believes Kinko's has crossed that line.

Nicholas Veliotes, president of the association, said the specific instances of infringement in the lawsuit are "only the tip of the iceberg," and that infringements will continue unless the court puts an end to it.

"They're (Kinko's) charging for that (copying)," Risher said. "They're getting paid for it and they're doing it a lot."

The lawsuit seeks statutory damages, which could reach millions of dollars, injunctive relief and attor-

Kinko's offered three out-of-court settlement proposals to the publishers, but all were refused.

"We made a proposal to pay the publishers royalties for the work and forget about fair use, but they refused it," Koenig said.

Koenig declined to disclose the amount or terms of the proposed settlements.

Risher, however, said there is nothing to settle.

"Our positions are so far apart, there is nothing to settle," she said.
"They violated the copyright law, and we strongly believe the evidence will support a finding of infringepanies are trying to stop all photoco-pying on college campuses and most universities don't even know about

"One of the problems now is that the schools aren't involved," he said. "Students' and professors' rights are oing to be restricted if the publishers win this case.

Risher denies that charge. "We're not opposed to photoco-ying," she said. "We want illegal photocopying to stop." Sumberg, representing university presidents, said he can't predict long-term effects of the lawsuit on college students and how they obtain copies of portions of textbooks.

"What happens in New York's courts really doesn't tell us what is going to happen in Texas," he said. "All courts differ."

Sumberg said though he believes the lawsuit is a landmark one, he doesn't believe the decision will be.

"They (courts) have skirted around precedents," he said. "They generally say, 'In this particular instance, ...' and come up with specific decisions. The fair use doctrine really has not been tested in the courts and I can't see the prospect of it now. The issues are not where a major precedent might be set.'
