Firm seeks buyout data

DALLAS (AP) — An investment banking firm interested in buying the financially troubled Greyhound Lines is courting the company's creditors, asking for release of private financial information, a spokesman said Monday.

Richard Ravitch, a partner of the New York-based Blackstone Group, said the firm is contacting Greyhound's creditors "one at a time," to ask their help in obtaining information needed for a buyout offer.

"We don't have access to the data—confidential information about the company—and we won't have unless the creditor can ask the company to (release it)," Ravitch said.

He and members of the striking bus drivers' union met Sunday in Washington to discuss a possible buyout offer, which Ravitch said could include partial employee ownership.

Greyhound has until Oct. 2 to exclusively present to creditors its reorganization plan under Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection.

"It's in (creditors') best interest to have another proposal than the on-they're going to get from the company," Ravitch said.

Greyhound spokesman George Gravelly said the company is forging

Pilot program puts students in uniforms

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Some inner-city elementary pupils are happily wearing what may become statewide school fashion trend: uniforms.

"They think they're at a very special school because they get to wear uniforms," said Sylvia Saucedo, president of the Parent Teacher Association at Herff Elementary School.

Herff pupils may choose to wear red, white and blue uniforms. The school is one of five in the San Antonio School District taking part in pilot program offering students the option of wearing uniforms.

Educators and parents say uniforms eliminate competition among students to wear expensive status clothing and helps put emphasis back on academics. They say uniforms also offer instant recognition and promote identification with the school and community.

Plus, they're economical. A set of uniform pants and a shirt cost about $25.

While uniforms traditionally have been associated with private and parochial institutions, more public schools nationwide are taking a look at uniforms. The San Antonio schools are among the first in Texas trying them out.

Herff Principal Pamela Alb Walls said pupils at her school like the idea.

"The grins on their faces are great to see," she said.
