Act Now

The Crime Prevention Unit of the Texas A&M University Police Department warns students to watch out for easy-opportunity thefts—lock bikes and leave them in a safe place.

In 1989, 275 bikes — worth more than $60,000 — were reported stolen on campus.

The majority of these bikes were secured with poor-quality locks, cables and chains, or not locked at all.

The worst months for bike thefts are May through September.

Only 29 of the stolen bikes were recovered in 1989, a value of $6,260.

The following are tips to help students keep their bikes safe:

- Use Operation Identification (recording serial number and engraving driver's license and state on your bike). It provides proof of ownership.
- Register your bike with the Department of Parking, Transit and Traffic Services. It's free and it is a way of returning your bike should it be recovered.
- Buy a sturdy, case-hardened steel U-shaped lock and lock it to a bike rack. Small chains and cables easily can be cut.
- Immediately report anyone suspicious loitering around bikes to the UPD, 845-2345.

For more information on bike locks and the Texas bike laws, call the Crime Prevention Unit, 845-8900.

Coed

was an upperclassman dorm, but also coed, so we did not take 10 different leaps at one time. It was gradual process."

Erica Schiefelbein, a junior elementary education major and secretary on Wells Hall's council, agrees the current status of the halls makes it easier to pass the 24-hour visitation policy.

"In claiming we deserve 24-hour visitation, there has gotten to be a big mix up when some members of the coed halls said we are more mature than underclassmen," she says. "We are not saying that."

"We are saying that as college students, hopefully we are mature, we're not mature, hopefully we're getting there and one way to help along is allowing us to have control of our lives and make our own decisions."

Maisonneuve says she and the Wells council agree the new policy will benefit residents in the long run.

Schiefelbein says coed halls have their advantages.

"A lot of people think negative thoughts about coed halls, but it's a good thing because you learn about different types of people," she says. "You're not going to be out in the work force dealing with just women or just guys."

"You are going to have to learn how to communicate with the opposite sex," she says.

A few, however, strongly oppose the new policy because of several reasons.

Brad Chambers, a sophomore accounting-finance major and App Hall president, says the change is definitely a bad safety measure.

With men allowed in the halls all hours, residents would not be concerned if they saw a man entering a woman's room.

Chambers says the policy could put women at risk of being raped.

"There were over 100 rapes a year and even more are not even reported," he says.

Although visitors are supposed to be escorted, Chambers says he has seen many visitors enter the halls without escorts.

"If not allowing the 24-hour visitation policy in A&M halls prevents only one rape, it will all be worth it," Chambers says.
