Monday recommending the administration update the system to make deposits more rapidly for faculty.

"There is a lot of variation in the amount of time checks are received each month," Storey says. "The resolution is centered around the fact that the computer system is not adequate to take care of it."

The resolution must be approved by the Senate's Executive Committee later this month before it is placed on October's agenda for discussion.

Storey says it would be ideal if the administration upgraded the system to transfer the deposits by computer, like the University of Texas' system, instead of mailing them.

"The (A&M) payroll office is antiquated," Zucker says. "A&M is a first-class institution and it's hard to believe the administration couldn't fix this problem if (it) wanted to."

Zucker says the Texas Faculty Association is hoping increased awareness among the A&M faculty will push the administration to improve the procedures.

"It's time for A&M to bring the payroll office into the 21st century," he says.

But Taylor says there are no plans to change the present policy of mailing checks to insurance companies, and he is not in favor of implementing an electronic system to deposit money by computer.

"I think there's a cheaper way to do it," he says. "The cost of implementing that would be negligible to the University."

and probably is cost competitive with oil now if the cost of oil spills, explosions and other factors are figured in.

Worsham, who pledges not to make any "no tax" promises, said he supports a broad tax on energy sources to further spur conservation.

"I support a broad energy tax rather than just a tax on gasoline," he said.

Worsham also said he would be in favor of a national recycling program to reuse glass, aluminum, plastic and other materials.

When asked if the "Earth vote" is enough to get him elected in November, he said he was unsure.

"If this was New Jersey, it might be," Worsham said. "But around here, I don't know. If people knew what was going on, it should be enough."

Worsham said his campaign against Barton and Welch has been mainly an informative one so far, but he hopes for more before elections.

"It's been informative up to now, but hopefully, it will get competitive soon," he said.

Worsham spoke to students in Bob Slovak's and Zandy Pustay's government classes.

The students already are active in the political and environmental scene. As part of the course, students must volunteer with a local candidate.

Two local political candidates, Jim James and Steve Ogden, spoke to the classes earlier this semester.

Student radio benefits from comedy show

KANM, Texas A&M's student-run radio station, received an $800 check from the sponsors of the Showtime Comedy Club Night.

The comedy club appeared Sept. 6 at the College Station Hilton as the money came from ticket proceeds.

Sponsors were the College Station Hilton, Showtime, TCA Cable TV and KAGG Aggie 96 FM.

Kevin Astudillo of TCA Cable TV said KANM was chosen as the benefactor to help the station, promote public relations within the community and welcome students back to school.

Astudillo said this is one of the first times TCA donated money to KANM.

She said the business wanted to help KANM because it's a student-run organization and the station receives no cash support.

Leigh Ellen Key, KANM music director, said the money will go into the station's general account. It will help pay phone bills and equipment repairs and rentals.
