Glimmers of peace cause oil prices to plummet

NEW YORK (AP) — The volatile price of oil took its second-sharpest fall of the Persian Gulf crisis, tumbling more than $2 per barrel Monday as traders thought they saw glimmers of peace.

Light sweet crude for November delivery dropped $2.42 to $37.09 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Oil's largest one-day fall since Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2 was $4 per barrel on Aug. 27.

Crude was down as much as $3.66 per barrel in light trading Monday afternoon, but regained part of that ground late in the day as some speculators bought futures to avoid being short on oil overnight.

Oil opened lower on a weekend statement from Iraqi President Saddam Hussein that was viewed by traders as being more conciliatory than usual. Oil then fell sharply around midday, when President Bush told the U.N. General Assembly he hoped there could be a diplomatic solution to the Mideast turmoil.

"The market was looking for some saber-rattling," said Brian Tagler, a broker at Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. "We know Bush wants the U.N. to approve taking military action. We thought there might be mention of that. There was none. It was a very peaceful speech."

Refined petroleum products also fell Monday.
