Youths incite racial tensions Rebel battle flag starts student riot

FORT WORTH (AP) — A racially charged confrontation sparked by displays of the Confederate battle flag at a high school here illustrates how insensitive youths are to minority concerns, some experts say.

Many students apparently don't know or have forgotten the racist symbolism attached to the Rebel flag. Experts say many white youths see themselves as victims of busing programs and affirmative action.

"Part of it is that there is a lack of history, of knowing about the civil rights era and the struggles this country went through in the late 1950s and the 1960s," Mark Briskman, regional director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in Dallas, said.

"To these kids, that is ancient history."

The Rebel flag made a turbulent return to Southwest High School last week despite being banned by the Fort Worth school district four years ago.

Four students who said they were trying to inspire school spirit were sent home Wednesday for wearing T-shirts featuring the flag. The boys returned to classes Thursday.

But a football pep rally Friday turned violent when someone slipped a makeshift Confederate flag into an overhead projection that was lowered during the rally.

That ignited a melee between at least 300 black and white students who shouted racial epithets and became involved in a series of scuffles. No serious injuries were reported, school officials said.

On Saturday, two teen-agers were arrested outside a grocery store that had been ransacked. A Rebel flag, racial slurs, and the phrase "Southwest rules" had been scratched into a desk at the store, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Sunday.

"I think young people in general have a lower tolerance for issues that are racially sensitive," Sara Bullard, research director for Klanwatch said. The non-profit national organization, based in Montgomery, Ala., monitors racist groups and incidents.

"I think they grew up in an era of affirmative action and they have little sense of what desegregation means to blacks and the civil rights movement," she said.

The racial problems that surfaced at Southwest may be the result of ideas students have learned at home, said Cliff Wiegand, student body president of Southwest.

Candidates to let voters decide on lottery issue

DALLAS (AP) — The state's next governor and lieutenant governor — regardless of who is elected — will not stand in the way if Texans want a state lottery.

Democrat Ann Richards and Republican Clayton Williams, both running for governor, said they would not second-guess the voters if they favor the lottery as a way to pay the state's bills.

Likewise, lieutenant governor candidates Bob Bullock, a Democrat, and Republican Rob Mosbacher also said they would not stand in the way of a lottery.

The candidates responded to a questionnaire published by the Dallas Morning News in Sunday's edition.

Richards, the state treasurer, said she supports the lottery and "would actively back legislation to have this issue placed before the voters as a constitutional amendment."

She said that revenue from the lottery should not be tied to "any specific areas, such as education, so that no state agency becomes dependent on that income."

Williams said a lottery should be submitted to voters for approval.

"We should consider all possible sources of revenue for the state which do not increase taxes," he said. If voters want it, said Williams, a lottery "could be part of the answer for needed additional revenues."
